Fight is on to turn historic theatre into 'hub' after £50k losses

By Marijke Cox
marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

A CAMPAIGN has been launched to turn a historic theatre into a community hub in a desperate bid to save it from closure.

Fears over the future of the Royal Victoria Hall in Southborough were raised after the town council revealed the theatre was losing £50,000 a year due to a lack of bookings.

Southborough Town Council, which runs the venue, put forward several options to secure a viable future and stressed that closure would be an "unlikely" last resort.

Options include finding sponsors, creating a charitable trust or turning it into a community hub.

Chairman of the town council, Jacqui Jedrzejewski, said it was unfair that taxpayers in Southborough and High Brooms were footing the bill for the theatre.

"It can't continue to be subsidised like this but we don't want the message to be that it's going to be bulldozed," she said. "What we want to do is get local views about what we can do to secure its future. This is not about knocking it down, but making it viable and giving it long-term survival."

"We can get bookings for next week or the week after, but that won't help. We need a long-term strategy."

"At this point in time, knocking it down is not an option. The council genuinely wants to get people involved and find a future for the theatre."

The Royal Victoria Hall was the first municipal theatre built in England under the Local Government Act of 1894.

It was built in 1900 to commemorate

FICTION

Home is where the book is for comic

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

GOOD research is usually vital to produce a cracking book – but comic Julian Clary has gone to amazing lengths for his spooky new detective novel.

He snapped up Noel Coward's former haunted home near Ashford, and then used it to set the scene in his third book, Briefs Encountered.

Coward was behind the 1945 film of a similar name, Brief Encounter, starring Trevor Howard.

Clary bought the playwright's manor house six years ago and soon decided it would be a fitting venue for a Coward-esque romp as it dates back to the 15th century. He lived there between 1926-56.

Clary's book is a glamorous thriller-romance set in and around his own home.

And there are ghosts, spirits even. Some of them are even a little blithe.

Choosing the house was an obvious decision after friend and now neighbour Paul O'Grady mentioned it was up for sale. It needed work, but Clary said he had enjoyed the challenge.

And then came the idea of basing the new book there, considering the links with ghosts and Coward – it even features himself as a "horrible mincing" homosexual.

A lifelong fan of Coward, Clary said it was easy to come up with the bizarre and convoluted tale of gay lovers across the generations.

He told KoS: "It is primarily about the house I live in. This was Noel Coward's house and there are two storylines. One is a fictional account of a true story of Noel's time here with his lover Jack Wilson.

"And there is a modern day story about the relationship of an actor called Richard Stent, also set in the same house.

"The two stories alternate and then through ghostly means they come together, if all that makes sense."

He does have some privacy issues with doing the book based on his own home, and he said: "I don't really want people to come knocking on the door. In one draft I had changed the name of the house but the publisher didn't like that. I changed the name of the village."

He included himself in the book, and asked what his character is like, he said:

"Oh, he's horrible.

"He is the mincing, lispy, D-rated celebrity that I am."

Clary said using another celebrity would have opened a legal can of worms and complications. "I won't be libelling myself. It is just a comic device," he said.

As for the inspiration for coming up with the book – Clary said after he moved in, it emerged there were four ghosts there. That added to Coward and his wild partying reputation, and he realised the house had some tales to tell.

He said: "I read the letters and diaries of Noel Coward, he bought the house at the time he met Jack Wilson and I realised he had bought it so he could conduct his love affair, which was illegal at the time.

"The house is very isolated, he was very rich, and his wild parties here were legendary.

"He was born in Teddington and I was raised there. I studied him during my education and did a production of Private Lives when I was 21."

He added: "The book is doing really well, and I would like to think people will be buying it on its merits.

"I know it's galling for bona fide authors but I can't do anything about that. I have got to make a living."

STAR TURN:

Julian Clary has launched a ghostly new book, Briefs Encountered

NEWS IN BRIEF

➔ Gills policing costs row

FANS may be banned from Gillingham FC's clash against rivals Swindon Town after the council slapped a prohibition notice on the fixture in a row over policing costs. It is an almost identical stand-off to the one that erupted 24 hours before the club's FA Cup clash with Premier League Stoke City earlier this year. Then Gills chairman Paul Scally backed down, but now the row could be set to rumble on with the game not due at Priestfield until April 21.

➔ Cohen Hop Farm show

LEONARD Cohen is to play his only UK show of the year at the Hop Farm in September. Promoter Vince Power, the brains behind the three-day Hop Farm Festival earlier in the summer, announced the Canadian singer-songwriter will perform a three-hour set. The show in Paddock Wood on September 8 forms part of Cohen's world tour. The setlist will include classic songs, rarities and new tracks from his latest best-selling album, Old Ideas.

➔ Fountains hit by drought

THE new fountains in Community Square, Gravesend, will not be switched on this summer after a hosepipe ban came into force across the county. Gravesend council said the fountains recycle their water but some is lost through evaporation. Council leader Cllr John Burden said: "As the drought situation begins to bite and is likely to get far worse, we are encouraging everyone in the community to do their best."

Inquiry as drunk students start ferry fires and flash travellers

UNIVERSITY heads have launched an investigation into the "disgraceful" behaviour of drunk students who streaked, danced on tables, and set fire to furniture on board a P&O ferry.

The ferry operator was so appalled it banned the students from returning on a P&O ship.

It is understood the students were on their way to Lloret de Mar in Spain.

Staff on the Dover-Calais Spirit of France on April 1 were forced to move other passengers to a secure part of the €180 million ship, which launched in February, after 200 students – from the University of Manchester and Manchester Metropolitan University – ran wild.

The operator said they were "clearly drunk" when they boarded the ship.

A P&O spokeswoman said: "Students from four of the coaches were running around exposing themselves, kicking bottles off tables, setting fire to furniture – it's not acceptable. It was all repairable damage, our main concern was the other passengers. This is not the kind of behaviour you expect on an early crossing."

The incident has been reported to the police.

DISGRACE:

The students ran amok on the Spirit of France ferry

"We are also working with the coach operator and the universities about this so they realise we will not accept this kind of behaviour."

A Manchester Metropolitan spokesman said an internal inquiry had been launched.

"We deplore behaviour of this sort," he said.

"We are keen to get to the bottom of it. We want to find out what the students have done and who is going to take responsibility."

The University of Manchester also said an internal inquiry was under way.

"We are in dialogue with P&O and have offered to co-operate to identify students who may have been involved in any criminal activity on this vessel," said a spokesman.

The students returned on Good Friday from Dunkirk with a different ferry operator.

Gang behind bars for 45 years after killing of father during farm burglary

By Ed Hill

ed.hill@archant.co.uk

SEVEN men from Kent involved in the death of a farmer while carrying out a burglary at his home have been sentenced to a total of 45 years in jail.

Julian Gardner, 53, was crushed between two cars at his farm in Robertsbridge, Sussex, in October, 2010, when the gang tried to steal spare parts from his farm machinery workshop.

Brothers Marcus Bristow, 32, and Terence Bristow, 42, both of Great Chart near Ashford, were found guilty of manslaughter, conspiracy to commit burglary, and conspiracy to pervert the course of justice. They were each jailed for 11 years.

Lee Delay, 23, from Tunbridge Wells, was found guilty of manslaughter, conspiracy to commit burglary and conspiracy to pervert the course of justice. He was jailed for seven years.

Paul Dunn, 33, from Cranbrook, was also found guilty of manslaughter and conspiracy to commit burglary. He was jailed for seven years.

Christopher Leek, 31, of Cranbrook, was found guilty of conspiracy to commit burglary and conspiracy to pervert the course of justice.

The jury was discharged after failing to reach a verdict on the charge of manslaughter for Leek and the case has been ordered to lay on file. He was jailed for four-and-a-half years.

Oliver Payne, 25, from Tunbridge Wells, was found not guilty of manslaughter but was convicted of conspiracy to commit burglary and conspiracy to pervert the course of justice. He was jailed for three years.

Terrence Dunn, 57, from Sandhurst, was found guilty of conspiracy to pervert the course of justice. He was jailed for 18 months.

Mr Gardner was woken by the gang and ran down to tackle them with a shotgun he kept at the farm. After taking thousands of pounds worth of spare parts, the gang then set light to two vehicles involved in Mr Gardner's death, including a Land Rover stolen from the farm.

A Sussex Police spokesman said: "This investigation was not a straightforward one. There were no witnesses and the evidence relied on DNA evidence at the scene and complex telecommunication evidence that had to be gathered by the investigating team."

After the sentencing, Mr Gardner's mother Molly, and sister Anna Murphy, said in a written statement: "Thanks to the justice system, those responsible for this appalling crime have now been found guilty, which as far as we're concerned was the only possible outcome."

"The criminals now convicted appear to have shown no remorse for their actions. All present that night bear responsibility and must live with Julian's death on their conscience forever."

COURT

£1 fine as man dies following pub fall

THE family of a mentally disabled man who fell down a pub cellar hatch and ultimately died, have spoken of their utter despair after the company was fined just £1.

David Gibson said his 52-year-old nephew had a mental age of a youngster, but was left alone in a room at the pub with an open hatch.

Mr Gibson, from Medway, said: "If that had been a child left alone and it died, there would have been uproar."

"But because this is a grown man, it seems no-one is bothered and the company, which no longer exists, is fined just a pound."

"This is a scandal. A man is dead and it looks like everyone has got away with it."

Sevenoaks council prosecuted the owner of the Shoreham pub.

Dickins Bartholomew LLP was the company that ran the Crown, in the High Street, and was taken to court following the incident on April 29, 2010.

Customer William Eldridge fell almost 8ft through an open cellar hatch in the bar floor.

He broke his leg in the fall. While waiting for his operation Mr Eldridge developed pneumonia and later died.

The council said it was not told of the incident until Mr Eldridge was already critically ill, which is against the law.

Dickins Bartholomew LLP had a duty to report the incident under the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1995.

The failure of Dickins Bartholomew LLP to report the accident significantly affected the council's ability to carry out an investigation into the incident, the court heard.

Dickins Bartholomew LLP pleaded guilty of failing to report the initial incident under the RIDDOR regulations, at Sevenoaks magistrates' court.

At the time of prosecution

Dickins Bartholomew LLP had already vacated the pub and is winding up the partnership due to significant financial problems.

The council said that in sentencing, the magistrate took into account the partnership was being wound up, had no bank account and no means to pay, case law on sentencing in similar cases where the defendant has no means to pay a fine, as well as an undertaking that the partners will never work in a pub or in management again, as well as their guilty plea.

In light of this the magistrate fined the partnership £1 with a £15 victim surcharge.

But Mr Gibson said: "My nephew is dead and there is a fine of £1. Someone left that door open, and someone left William in that room. Someone should have been taken to court."

"There has been no justice. Words cannot express how angry I am."

Public asked to contribute for £100,000 memorial to salute heroic WWII fighter

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A FUNDRAISING drive has been launched to pay for a statue to commemorate a Sikh fighter pilot who helped defeat the Luftwaffe.

The move by Gravesham Borough Council will provide a permanent memorial to honour Squadron Leader Mahinder Singh Pujji.

S/L Singh Pujji, from Gravesend, died in September, 2010, after suffering a stroke.

It hopes to raise £100,000 through public subscription to build a specially commissioned statue on a town centre site owned by the council. The upkeep of the memorial will be met by Gravesham Borough Council.

Town hall officials believe a permanent memorial to S/L Pujji is an appropriate way to reflect his contribution to the battle Britain and its Allies fought to preserve freedom and defeat tyranny and oppression. It will also serve as a reminder that many brave people from other countries and cultures served in Britain's Armed Forces in the cause of freedom.

S/L Pujji was thought to have been the last surviving member of the 24 Indian fighter pilots who joined the RAF in 1940.

He was one of thousands who risked their lives in the Battle of Britain, and was also awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for bravery after helping save 300 American soldiers from

REMINDER: S/L Pujji died in 2010 and was one of 24 Indian fighter pilots who joined the RAF in 1940

Japanese troops in the Burmese jungle.

When interviewed by KoS in March, 2010, the decorated veteran told how he narrowly avoided death following one dogfight over the English Channel when his turban acted as a crash helmet.

"In the fight a German bullet smashed into my dashboard and all my instruments were gone," he said. "Oil was pouring out of the engine and covered the windscreen.

"I could see the White Cliffs and thought I would make it, and then the landing strip appeared with fire engines around it.

"But as I put my landing gear down the fire took hold of the plane. There was blood pouring from my head, but that 6ft of wound cloth which made up my turban saved me from worse impact injuries."

S/L Pujji, who also fought in Africa, the Middle East, Palestine and Asia, signed up for the RAF after responding to an advert in an Indian newspaper declaring 'Pilots needed for Royal Air Force'.

He wore a turban at all times while flying and even kept a spare in the cockpit, but this prevented him from wearing an oxygen mask and he suffered lung problems in later life as a result.

In later years S/L Pujji dedicated his life to helping people in need, and in 2008 he received a lifetime achievement award from Gravesham council.

He also hit the headlines when he attacked BNP leader Nick Griffin for using pictures of the iconic Spitfire aircraft on the far-right party's website.

He said: "The BNP are wrong to use the Spitfire as representative of their party. They forget people from different backgrounds helped in World War Two. I am proof of this."

LAW

Calls to reform 'unfair' extradition treaties as trio suffer at hands of foreign legal systems

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THE thorny issue of extradition and the problems surrounding the treaty between the UK and the US has long sparked debate in Parliament.

A vote was called at the end of last year demanding urgent renegotiation of the agreement and just last month – prompted by high-profile cases including extradited Kent resident Christopher Tappin – David Cameron pressed Barack Obama to address the subject.

Now, in what is seen as a step towards reform, MPs on the Home Affairs Committee have demanded major amendments be made to the 2003 US-UK extradition treaty.

Tory MP for Rochester and Strood Mark Reckless, who sits on the committee, said it was wrong there was such an unbalanced agreement. He said: "Firstly, if the case is more related to the UK than the US a person shouldn't be extradited and they should be given the chance to appear in a British court.

"Secondly, it's easier for the US to extradite someone than the UK. The US only needs to establish probable cause to extradite, but the UK has to find reasonable suspicion.

"There are also issues with the European Arrest Warrant and I'm hoping in 2014 we will come out of this agreement."

Mr Reckless admitted that changes were unlikely to help Mr Tappin, from Orpington, who is accused of conspiring to export batteries for Iranian missiles, something he vehemently denies.

The former Kent Golf Union president was extradited to a Texan jail in February, shackled and kept in isolation. He was refused bail on the grounds of being a "flight risk".

The 65-year-old's family has criticised the way he has been treated and called for the extradition treaty to be examined.

His wife Elaine said: "Shouldn't it be a basic requirement that a proper case be made out against my husband in a UK court before subjecting him to total disruption to his life? Isn't that the cornerstone of British justice?"

While the case of Mr Tappin continues, another – this time concerning the controversial European Arrest Warrant (EAW) – has hit the headlines involving Canterbury resident Graham Mitchell.

The EAW is a fast-track system for extraditing people from one European country to another.

MPs have criticised the system, arguing it has led to injustice in many cases where people have been moved around and detained for long periods before a trial.

The 49-year-old former Scots Guardsman was prosecuted for attempted murder while on holiday in Portugal in 1994, after a German tourist suffered serious injuries falling from a 12ft sea wall.

Mr Mitchell, who denied the accusation, was locked up for 10 months with no charges brought and he claimed to have been treated badly, with guards spitting and throwing urine at him.

During his trial in 1995 the victim said he had been involved in an accident and Mr Mitchell and his friend were acquitted. But last month – 17 years later – an EAW was issued for his arrest on the charge of first degree murder; he was arrested by Kent Police and now faces trial in Portugal.

Fair Trials International, which is supporting Mr Mitchell, is fighting for reform of the EAW.

Fair Trials International also helped Garry Mann, from Faversham, who was extradited in 2010 to serve a two-year prison sentence in Portugal imposed following a trial in 2004. This trial was described by a UK court as "so unfair as to be incompatible with his right to a fair trial".

He was tried and convicted of rioting in the Euro 2004 football tournament, but Mr Mann, who protested his innocence, claimed he had no time to prepare a defence and that standards of interpretation were "grossly inadequate".

Bakery fined over mouse droppings

MEOPHAM Bakery has been fined £600 with £490 costs for three food hygiene offences following an inspection by Gravesham Borough Council.

The owners of the premises in Wrotham Road, Meopham, pleaded guilty at Dartford Magistrates' Court to the charges which involved food not being protected against contamination; the food premises were being kept clean and maintained in good repair, and the premises' structural condition did not permit good hygiene practices.

Many parts of the premises and equipment were filthy. There was evidence of poor electrical work and mouse droppings in the storeroom next to flour supplies.

The court heard there was a significant improvement in terms of cleanliness, and that thousands had been spent.

EastEnders' Heather trots into town as Cinderella's lovely Fairy Godmother

By James Benjamin
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

HER dramatic death sparked a ratings-winning whodunnit in top soap EastEnders, but Heather Trott is set for a dramatic return after being confirmed as the star of this year's pantomime in Chatham.

Cheryl Ferguson, who played the Albert Square murder victim, will appear in the Central Theatre's family show of Cinderella this winter.

She will play the Fairy Godmother, as producer of the show, Evolution Productions, unveiled its first details for the festive box office money-spinner.

It will be Ms Ferguson's first ever pantomime role.

The actress said: "I'm thrilled to be playing the part. I've heard theatre and Medway audiences are brilliant, so it's going to be loads of fun."

The star had been a regular in the STAR: Cheryl Ferguson, aka Heather Trott, will appear in panto Cinderella

BBC soap since 2007 before writers killed her off in dramatic fashion last month when she was murdered by Phil Mitchell's troubled son Ben. Viewers were then left asking whether he would confess to the crime.

Although best known for her role in the Square, she has been a familiar face in many popular TV shows including Doctor Who, Little Britain, Casualty, Bad Girls, The IT Crowd, and 'Allo 'Allo.

Pantomime producer Paul Hendy added: "We're really proud and excited that Cheryl will be headlining our cast. She's such a great character both on screen and off, and is hugely popular with viewers of all ages, so we know she's going to go down a storm in Chatham this Christmas."

She follows in the footsteps of rapper Vanilla Ice who headlined performances of Peter Pan as Captain Hook.

Cinderella runs from December 13 to January 6. Details of other cast members will be confirmed later this summer.

Ms Ferguson is no stranger to Kent, having trained at the Rose Bruford College in Sidcup, on the community theatre arts course.

ROAD SAFETY

Youngsters told not to suffer dangerous driving in silence

By Ed Hill

ed.hill@archant.co.uk

YOUNG people are being told to lose their fear of speaking up if they are in a car being driven dangerously.

Kent County Council has produced two ads about road safety to be shown in cinemas.

The first film is targeted at young drivers who drive dangerously. It asks passengers who are in a car with a driver who is driving erratically, using a mobile phone, or under the influence of drugs or alcohol, not to be afraid to speak up and tell the driver to stop.

It makes the comparison with social networking sites such as Twitter and Facebook where young people readily express themselves.

KCC road safety team leader Steve Horton said: "It is ironic that through social media sites young people have found their voice on many issues, but when in the confined environment of a car they remain silent if a driver is driving badly."

"We want young people to find their voice in the same way they exert their opinions with social media to speak up and tell drivers it is their life they are responsible for when driving them."

According to KCC, in the last three years 228 car occupants aged 16-24 have been killed or seriously injured on Kent's roads.

The road safety team is also highlighting the dangers of not wearing a seatbelt.

It has commissioned a film When Will it Click,

WARNING: KCC has made two road safety ads

Seatbelts Save Lives using stop-motion techniques to highlight the dangers of not wearing a seatbelt. The message is aimed not just at drivers, but at rear seat passengers as well.

Since the introduction of compulsory seatbelt wearing in 1983, the Government estimates more than 6,000 deaths and 670,000 serious injuries have been prevented.

Drivers and passengers aged between 17-34 have the lowest seatbelt wearing rates combined with the highest crash rate. The fine for not wearing a seat belt is £60. For passengers aged under 14 the driver is responsible.

The council is also touring the county with a number of events featuring a device called a 'seatbelt sledge' which simulates a crash for a passenger travelling at just 6mph.

Private hospital 'could save not only lives but NHS cash'

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

WORK on an £80 million private hospital gets underway this month – but a quarter of the beds will be set aside for NHS patients, with the new owners claiming it will save expensive and time-consuming trips to London totalling thousands of miles a year.

The Kent Institute of Medicine and Surgery, known as KIMS, is being built near the M20 at Maidstone close to three PCT borders, ensuring a massive catchment area when it opens in 2014.

Work starts on the seven-acre site after 100 clinicians managed to persuade investors to provide capital after putting up their own money.

The chairman of the KIMS medical advisory committee is Dr Tony Hammond.

He said: "The good news is we have managed to persuade external investors to put up £80m into healthcare in Kent. This investment will create around 400 new jobs – from specialists to cleaners, cooks, and maintenance.

"While this is principally a private hospital development, there are many reasons it benefits the everyday patient in Kent. We are bringing in specialist service which currently don't exist or are not well provided like neurosurgery. In the majority of cases, if you need spinal surgery at present in Kent, you need to go to London.

"If a GP is primary care, your local district hospital is secondary care. The cases your local hospital can't handle and refers on are tertiary.

"One of our big focuses is to bring the specialists that provide tertiary services in to the county."

KIMS will also provide Kent's only cardiothoracic beds and its owners hope the facility will attract some of the £250m currently being spent sending local patients to London hospitals.

Other areas of care will include gynaecology, orthopaedics, oncology and diagnostics, advanced MRI and nuclear medicine.

KIMS is being heralded as one of the UK's most advanced surgical hospitals. In the longer term, there is a vision to extend and create a centre of excellence medical and science campus.

Dr Hammond said the KIMS prices will be lower than those at a premium rate in London, making them attractive to the NHS to save money.

Village churches host cricket rebel Olonga

FORMER Zimbabwe international cricketer Henry Olonga is coming to Staplehurst to speak to churchgoers.

Olonga was Zimbabwe's first black cricketer, and made headlines across the globe at the 2003 Cricket World Cup when he wore a black armband to protest against the death of democracy in Zimbabwe.

He was forced to flee his country after being accused of treason by Mugabe's regime.

An evening with Henry Olonga is presented by Team-Spirit Staplehurst which is a joint initiative by the four churches serving the village.

They are bringing a series of free events to Staplehurst during the course of the year including comedy, talks and a family sports day.

These events start with an evening with Henry Olonga on Saturday, April 28, at Staplehurst School from 7pm.

HISTORY

TRAGIC SHIP: Titanic, which was reported as being 'unsinkable', sank on her maiden voyage 100 years ago, her bell apparently rang as she hit the iceberg

Life and death stories of the Kent passengers aboard doomed Titanic

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

A HUNDRED years ago this week the Titanic set off on its maiden voyage to America, its passengers blissfully unaware of the tragedy that lay ahead.

Among them was Kate Buss, a 36-year-old woman from Sittingbourne who was travelling to the US to wed her fiancé, and Richard Henry Rouse, a 50-year-old coal miner, also from Sittingbourne, who was emigrating with his family after losing his job in a coal strike.

Other passengers from Kent included Frank and Emily Goldsmith, aged 31 and 33, from Strood, and their son Frank, 9, as well as 29-year-old Elizabeth Nye from Folkestone.

Kent resident Harry Bristow, 39, who was living in Bromley, was working as a first-class saloon steward onboard the ship.

But the tales of these passengers ended very differently, with some surviving the disaster and others perishing in the Atlantic.

Miss Buss, who was born in Shakespeare Road, booked her trip on the Titanic as a second-class passenger for £13.

According to records, she joined the liner in Southampton, spending her days socialising with other second-class passengers until that fateful night on April 14, 1912, when disaster struck.

Archives suggest Miss Buss had been lying in her bunk reading a newspaper when the collision occurred.

She went to the cabin of fellow female passenger Marion Wright and the pair went out onto deck where they were told the ship had hit an iceberg.

After being instructed to put on warm clothes by a man named as Douglas Norman, Miss Buss was loaded onto a lifeboat with her female companion.

According to records, when they reached the Carpathia – the ship which became famous for the part it played in rescuing passengers from the stricken liner – Miss Buss was last to leave the lifeboat due to her fear of heights and the prospect of climbing the rope ladder onto deck.

On arriving in New York, Miss Buss was taken to a hostel for women and was later helped by an American reverend who had been contacted by the then-bishop of Sittingbourne.

She eventually reached San Diego after receiving funds from the American Red Cross, and met her fiancé. The couple were married on May 11, just a month after the Titanic set sail on its doomed voyage.

According to archives, Miss Buss died aged 96 in July, 1972.

The story of the other Sittingbourne passenger, however, ended in tragedy.

Mr Rouse, who lived in New Road, perished in the disaster. His body – if recovered – was never identified.

Archives state the 50-year-old had been travelling to America to his daughter's house before bringing his wife Charity and eight-year-old daughter Gladys over permanently.

Reports state the whole family was to emigrate to Cleveland, Ohio, but Mr Rouse chose to sail ahead to find work and set up a place to live.

Before his doomed trip, he took his wife and daughter to view the Titanic in Southampton and it is reported that Mrs Rouse was so overcome with fear she told her husband: "This ship is too big, it will never reach America" and attempted to talk him out of travelling on the liner.

But he argued that the ship was "unsinkable" and boarded in Southampton as a third-class passenger with a ticket costing £8.

Elizabeth Nye, the daughter of a coach builder who was part of the Folkestone's Salvation Army corps, was travelling back to America to continue work for the Salvation Army following a visit to her hometown.

According to reports, she spent five hours in a lifeboat as people drowned around her.

She was one of the last survivors to be rescued. In the 1980s, when divers reached the wreck of the Titanic, a jug with the inscription 'A Present from Folkestone' was found, which historians believe belonged to Ms Nye.

The other Kent passenger Emily Goldsmith lost her husband Frank in the sinking, and crew member Harry Bristow perished.

Thankful dad snaps hospital staff who saved his baby son

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A GRATEFUL photographer has professionally snapped every member of the hospital team who saved the life of his new-born son.

When little Phineas Cockerham was born, he quickly developed a dangerous fever which put his life in jeopardy.

He was just three-weeks-old in May, 2010, and had been turned away from one hospital by a doctor who dismissed his plight as routine.

But his parents Michael and Laura were convinced something was wrong and got him admitted to Darent Valley Hospital where it was soon clear he needed more specialist treatment.

Hospital staff found his oxygen and blood sugar levels had slumped to a potentially lethal level.

Even if he survived, brain damage was a possibility. His immune system was overpowered by a then-mystery illness and he was rushed to the Evelina Children's Hospital 12 miles away in central London.

For next the few days, Phineas clung to life as medics flooded his body with antibiotics and antivirals to give him a fighting chance of beating the fever.

There was also a lumbar puncture to check his spinal fluid for brain inflammation.

Michael, 42, said: "As well as the lumbar punctures, there were electro-encephalographs, ultrasound brain scans, more infusions, more drugs."

Slowly but surely Phineas battled through, helped by of an army of medical experts.

To show his gratitude, Michael took professional shots of all 63 people at the Evelina who had been involved in the fight for a book that will raise funds for the ward, and hopes to do another with the 40 or so Darent staff later.

The thankful father lives with wife Laura, 33, and other sons Joshua, seven, and Toby, four.

He said: "I never want to forget the people who fought to save my son. To ask if your child is going to die and be met with a long pause and a non-committal answer sent emotions raging.

"I want to highlight the huge team involved in his care to show the number of medics needed to save a baby.

"When you hear cuts are needed in hospitals, I can now see it is almost impossible to do it sensibly because as anyone can see in our case, all these people are needed."

It took six days to beat parechovirus, which is usually not dangerous as it generally attacks those older and stronger with an inbuilt ability to fight back.

Michael, from Hextable, added: "One of the doctors came to us and said it had been life-threatening, but that he was going to pull through. We were just overwhelmed and Laura dissolved into tears – it was a combination of such fatigue, worry and relief."

Missing classmates sought for 60th anniversary reunion

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

THE class of '52 is getting together this year – again. In fact this is the 60th year the students of 5th ox.form are getting together, and this time they are hitting the town.

Organiser Sheila Stevens, 75, or Prendergast as she used to be called, said: "We want to track a few of our classmates who haven't been to any of our reunions yet."

The fifth Oxford form pupil at Waverley Secondary in Plumstead, said: "So far, they have all been held in people's houses, but this year we are pushing the boat out and going to a Kent hotel for the reunion."

"It's so lovely to see everyone, but there are a few from the class who haven't come along and we would love to see them again."

"It was an all-girls school at the time so there was nothing going on behind the bike shed."

Sheila has lived in Maidstone, Welling, Gravesend and Dartford and is now in Colchester.

She said: "Every year we have about 15 girls come to the reunions and despite their age they come from everywhere, including Cornwall, France, Spain and Norway."

"We always talk about the others that aren't there, and wonder what has become of them. It would be amazing to see everyone together."

With their maiden names, the girls they are trying to trace include Tessa Brown, Brenda Cox,

BACK IN THE DAY: Girl students of 5th ox.form

Evelyn Irving, Celia Howard, Berenice Torode, Elsie Maggs, Alice Delieu, Sylvia Beale, Doreen Card, and June Wiltshire.

Sheila said: "We are not sure of their current whereabouts, but are hoping at least some of them will read the paper and get in touch."

"Being the 60th time we have got together makes this a very special occasion and it really is the case of the more the merrier."

"I have to admit I don't know if any have since passed away, but we are keeping our fingers crossed they haven't. Even if someone knows these girls, if they can get in touch and let me know what happened to them I would be really grateful."

The reunion is taking place on May 19 at the Thistle Hotel, Brands Hatch. Sheila said: "It is centrally situated for pretty much every one."

Anyone reading this that would like to come can contact Sheila on 07505 965 494 or 01206 845 548 or email sheila.stevens@ntlworld.com.

CONCERT

Russia's soul portrayed in song by male voice choir

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A CHOIR from St Petersburg in Russia is performing in Kent later this month.

The Hermitage Ensemble is a small male voice choir who will be singing at St Giles Church, Shipbourne, near Tonbridge.

The singers have a wide musical education and in their homeland are often hired as soloists in operas and concerts.

The aim of the choir is to maintain the Russian traditions of church music and to bring choral music of the eastern Church closer to western people.

Their programme consists of liturgical choral music and psalms, but also includes various folk songs, said concert organiser John Young.

He said that in the 19th century Balakirev, the music director at the Court Chapel, and Rimsky-Korsakov, produced a large collection of harmonized plainsong. Nearly all the leading Russian composers wrote music for the rites of the Russian Orthodox Church and the ensemble will be performing several of the works.

Mr Young said: "The folk and national songs, which form the second half of the concert, show a range of emotion and, with their rhythms and melodies, convey with their inimitable spirit all that is characteristic of the great Russian soul.

"They sing unaccompanied and sound like a Slav barber shop quartet one minute, and the massed ranks of the Red Army the next.

"They are, as individuals, at home in the opera houses and concert halls of St Petersburg, but they see it as the goal of their ensemble to maintain the Russian traditions of church music and folk music."

For a £10 ticket contact John Young at jyoung@waitrose.com or phone 01732 810289, or send a SAE with a cheque payable to Shipbourne PCC at Stonewold House, The Street, Plaxtol, Kent TN15 0QH.

Help at hand for the great switchover to digital TV

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

THOUSANDS of homes in digital blackspots will receive Freeview television for the first time next month as the traditional analogue signal is switched off.

Digital switchover will take place countywide over May and June, giving the majority of households access to more than 40 Freeview channels free through their aerial.

It is hoped that people living in areas of Thanet, Canterbury and Ashford – which have suffered years of poor television reception – will be able to get an improved signal.

Parts of north Kent which pick up signal from a London transmitter began the switchover process this week.

South west Kent and the Tunbridge Wells area will start the stage one process – the BBC Two analogue switch-off – on May 30 and stage two – all analogue channels off – on June 13. For the remainder of Kent, stages one and two will happen on June 13 and June 27 respectively.

Viewers will be able to pick up the traditional channels as well as a range of other digital channels and services for free via an aerial.

But while nine out of 10 households in Kent are prepared – having already transferred their TVs – Digital UK, the organisation assisting in the switchover, said there are still some viewers who will need to convert their TV sets to digital to ensure they are capable of receiving services.

A Digital UK spokesman said: "Switchover happens for most viewers in Kent from May and will make Freeview available to thousands of homes across the county for the first time.

"Anyone still receiving only four or five analogue channels through an aerial will need to convert their set before switchover or risk facing a blank screen. Virtually any TV can be converted."

People already with Freeview, BT Vision or Top Up TV will have to retune their TV once the switchover starts.

Help is at hand from Digital UK, which is inviting people to contact them with any queries.

MP for South Thanet Laura Sandys, who has long been campaigning for better television signal for her constituents, also offered to help households. The area suffers particularly badly with poor reception due to an area of high atmospheric pressure.

Ms Sandys said: "While there is little we can do about the weather, I have been working hard to ensure TV reception is improved come switchover.

"This has included raising Thanet's particular signal problems in Parliament, meeting with the minister, Ofcom and Digital UK to discuss solutions to these issues, and asking Digital UK to come to Thanet to provide extra support for the switchover.

"I am also putting a safety net in place to ensure that if we do encounter any problems come switchover, these issues will be resolved.

"I would urge anyone experiencing problems with their TV reception to email me at tv@sandys.org.uk so I can ensure that the correct support is put in place."

Viewers can get independent advice on going digital by visiting www.digitaluk.co.uk or calling 08456 505050.

■ To read more about the digital switchover see the Opinion on page 28.

CHANNEL HOPPING:

The county will see the switchover to a digital signal during May and June which should allow many homes access to Freeview channels for the first time

HEALTH

Dementia care to improve as demand keeps growing

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

HEALTH chiefs are investing £3.5 million to improve mental health services for older people as part of a drive to tackle the growing problem of dementia.

It comes as the Government highlights the need to improve care and research.

Currently 18,000 people live with the condition in the county, and this is expected to increase to 31,000 by 2026.

NHS chiefs in Kent and Medway have pledged to expand and improve specialist support for people with dementia; launch a round-the-clock crisis service; and invest £3.5m by April, 2014, in mental health hospital wards.

As part of the overhaul, a consultation is looking at helping people with dementia live in their homes for longer and improving facilities for those who need hospital care.

GP commissioning lead for mental health at NHS Kent and Medway Dr Gunalakhman

CARE: The investment aims to improve both care and research

Kanagassoriam said: "We know being in a familiar environment, cared for by people they love, reduces stress and anxiety for people with mental health conditions; enables them to stay in touch more easily with friends and family; and avoids the risk of them losing their independence.

"However, without the right level of support, sometimes in a crisis, for example when the carer becomes ill, people with dementia can be admitted to hospital unnecessarily.

"We are planning on investing £600,000 to expand our range of services in the community to ensure people with dementia can remain independent for as long as possible.

"At the same time, we recognise that facilities in mental health wards for older people in east Kent need improving.

"We want to ensure everyone has a single room with en suite bathroom, access to communal space and safe, secure, outdoor spaces.

"The treatment environment can impact on their recovery."

Kent and Medway NHS and Social Care Partnership Trust is planning an investment of £3.5m to remodel its hospital wards for older people.

There are four wards for people with mental health problems spread across Canterbury, Ashford and Margate. There is also a Home Treatment Service providing intensive, short-term support, in which health chiefs are investing £250,000.

See the consultation at www.easternandcoastalkent.nhs.uk/opmhreview or call 0800 085 6606 for a copy. The closing date for responses is June 25.

KENT REMEMBERED

RIP: King Henry IV's tomb lies next to his consort Queen Joanne of Navarre in Canterbury Cathedral

King's tomb shrouded in myth and legend

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

THE sole King of England to be buried in the sacred halls of Canterbury Cathedral is Henry IV – immortalised by William Shakespeare.

He is interred in Trinity Chapel alongside his consort Queen Joanne of Navarre, just across from the far better known tomb of Edward the Black Prince – a man whose son he forced off the throne and is believed to have been gruesomely murdered on his royal command.

Alabaster effigies of the couple mark their resting place.

Henry, originally known as Henry Bolingbroke, was born in 1367, and reigned from 1399 until 1413.

He spent some early years fruitlessly helping the Teutonic Knights attack Vilnius, now the capital of Lithuania, before making a pilgrimage to Jerusalem.

He had been a childhood friend of the then-king of England Richard II, but a chance remark was interpreted as treason and Henry was exiled and his inheritances seized.

But when Richard was on a military campaign in Ireland, Henry returned and rallied his supporters.

Declaring himself King, he captured and imprisoned Richard who then suffered one of history's most infamous legendary deaths – by red hot poker, although this story has never been verified.

Henry's coronation on October 13, 1399, was significant as it marked the first time the new monarch had addressed the assembled throng in English – rather than French – since the Norman Conquest.

CROWNING GLORY: Henry IV became King of England in 1399

With Richard's body on display in St Paul's Cathedral, to show any remaining supporters their claimant to the throne was dead, he now faced the problems of governing Medieval England.

Plots, rebellions and assassination attempts marked Henry's reign with Welshman Owain Glyndr having some military success, before his the king's son – later to become Henry V – bested the upstart on the battlefield.

Other conflicts Henry IV faced included those against Richard loyalists the earls of Kent, Huntingdon and Salisbury; the Percy family, who he defeated at the Battle of Shrewsbury; and the Archbishop of York and the Earl of Northumberland with his Scottish allies.

Political triumphs included entertaining the only Byzantine emperor to visit England, Manuel II Palaiologos, who saw a joust held in his honour at Eltham, and the capture of King James I of Scotland by English pirates whom he kept as a prisoner.

But a disfiguring skin disease – possibly a form of leprosy – was taking its toll and severe attacks of an undiagnosed illness, maybe cardiovascular or epilepsy, resulted in Henry IV's death.

Prophecies had stated he would die in Jerusalem and Shakespeare echoes this.

The monarch had told his court he believed this meant he would die on crusade – but he actually died in the Jerusalem Chamber of the house of the Abbot of Westminster.

Henry IV had stated his wish to be buried at Canterbury, but the reasons why are unclear with the royal story then turning to fable.

It is believed a massive storm washed over the ship carrying his coffin as it sailed past Faversham, and according to some accounts the remains of the monarch were thrown overboard to lighten the vessel's load.

Controversy continued up until the 19th century when the tomb was opened to establish the truth once and for all.

The story then goes that Henry's body, complete with preserved red beard, was bought to view, just seconds before it crumbled to dust on exposure to the air.

Sending out all the right signals

The digital TV revolution is about to hit Kent. Tony Gray from Digital UK offers a switchover guide for any worried viewers still out there...

IN A night of savage winter storms a couple of years ago, I stood in a seaside village hall extolling the virtues of digital television.

From the back of the room, a white-haired old man looking every inch an Old Testament prophet called out: "I tell you it just won't bloody work! And even if it does, no-one will be able to understand it. You are murdering the best television service in the world."

Hundreds of village meetings later, I'm quietly relieved to say the Jeremiahs seem to have been proved wrong. The homicide squad haven't come knocking on my door yet.

This Wednesday, analogue TV signals will be turned off for viewers in north Kent who pick up their signal from the Crystal Palace transmitter in London.

Switchover in other parts of Kent starts on 30 May and runs throughout June.

By next Wednesday, 89 per cent of the UK – more than 23 million homes – will have switched successfully from analogue to digital-only television.

It's the biggest change in British broadcasting in nearly half a century.

There are three simple, golden rules to make sure your TV screen doesn't go blank at digital switchover:

1. If you're still watching four or five channels on analogue TV, convert it with a digital box costing on average £25.
2. If you already watch Freeview (digital TV through an aerial), retune your equipment to avoid losing channels.
3. If you have satellite or cable TV, you don't need to do anything.

Virtually every analogue TV can be converted to digital and most homes will be fine with the aerial they have at the moment.

Switchover is happening so that high-power Freeview channels can be broadcast to almost every home, including free high-definition TV channels.

Quite rightly, everyone asks me how older and disabled people will survive.

A couple of weeks ago, I met a 92-year-old lady in one of our advice centres.

She sat down for a quick lesson in how to fit a digital box, went straight home to convert all the TVs in her house... then came back with home-made chocolate cupcakes to say thank you.

"I'm delighted I could do it," she said with a smile. "It was a great feeling to be able to tell my grandson I didn't need his help with new technology."

Cupcakes aside, there's lots of help and information available for everyone.

For those aged 75 or older, or with certain disabilities, the Switchover Help Scheme can

Three rules to making sure your TV screen doesn't go blank provide everything you need to switch one TV to digital and the scheme is still open. (Action with Communities in Rural Kent is looking for volunteers to help out with this work in small communities. Email kathy.bugden@ruralkent.org.uk if you're interested.)

The digital switchover roadshows, with their bright pink vans, are coming soon to a shopping centre near you.

Every home in Kent will receive a free 20-page guide in the post. Pop-up captions and advertisements appear regularly on your TV screens.

If all that fails and you still haven't done anything by the time switchover arrives, your TV screen will go blank.

But I'm determined it won't come to that.

[To find out when and how the digital TV switchover works where you live, visit www.digitaluk.co.uk or call 08456 50 50 50.]

Remember to plan space for the dead

IF THERE'S one thing in life that's inevitable, it's death, meaning the problem of finding new burial space is something that generations before us and generations after us have had and will have to tackle.

The fact that there is little burial space left in parts of Kent is nobody's fault, except, you could argue, that planning should have started earlier.

Then again, planning for a cemetery is not like planning a new house. There are strict rules to be followed, which means that any such plan can take years to be agreed.

Councils talk about the importance of housing for future generations, but a resting place for those departing this world is also greatly needed.

A horrendous loss

ONE hundred years ago this weekend, more than 1,500 people died in the sinking of the Titanic.

The disaster had a devastating impact across the globe, something that is still felt today.

This weekend, take a moment to remember all those who perished.

Sea change for drought issue

DOES the sinking of the Titanic publicity – featuring hot and cold, fresh and sea water – offer another possible solution to our present drought?

The water companies appear to give a low priority to delivery by stopping leaks and supplying the needs of our households, industry and farmers.

Such solutions as a water grid – piping water from Scotland – or bringing it south via our canal systems appear to offend water companies' territorial ethos and receive lower consideration than their bonuses.

Why don't the water companies follow the example set by the Titanic – no I am not advocating drowning their management – but simply laying an extra water pipe to each house (or at least schools, public facilities such as swimming baths, town halls and major industry complexes) carrying sea water to take care of their loo requirements and other non-essential water activities.

New household industries could arrive as washing machines and other white goods are adapted or receive additives to make them sea water friendly – problem solved.

Edward La Coste, Lamberhurst

Ukip offer the only solution

WE do not have a coalition government, what we have is a dictatorship of two very rich men who don't care one iota for England.

I have just seen a family whom I have known all my life leave to live elsewhere because this government has made them bankrupt.

What would they have to look forward to if they stayed: a means test after working all their lives to ensure they had a comfortable retirement?

And they are not alone; you cannot fight a dictatorship.

I have voted for the Tory Party all my life, but they won't get my vote next time.

I am voting for Ukip, and I only hope all who love our country will vote for them also, they are the only party who seem to care about the land we fought for and are now losing without a fight.

The other parties have had their chance – now time for a drastic change.

John R O'Neon, Folkestone

Vote against usual suspects

TAX reductions and changes benefiting businesses and the better-off are being 'mis-sold' on the basis they will create jobs and growth. They won't.

The old bust-to-boom solutions will no longer work.

Government austerity measures and unemployment are taking money from ordinary shoppers' pockets, and reducing tax receipts, thereby contracting the economy, whereas, much of wealthier individuals and businesses increased net disposable income is being 'hoarded' or spent outside the UK.

Austerity measures are merely starting, with far worse to come. Government is relying on 'growth' to reduce its deficit. Even optimistically, this growth would be marginal, because it has ignored technology and population factors and wrongly assumes that 'corrections' will occur as previously.

As financial institutions that largely created our national and global economic crisis would say: "The past is not a guide to the future."

Parliament is responsible for: allowing this disaster to happen; the ineffectual measures being taken; and their effect on the lower paid, including pensioners.

Therefore, may I urge that we use the May local elections to signal our disapproval and lack of confidence in the current government, by not voting for their candidates.

A low vote for those candidates would send that message.

Local candidates are not themselves responsible for our worsening national situation – but their political parties and national leaders are.

John Dutton, Tunbridge Wells

Good work is there already

I WAS interested to read your recent article about the Big Society Co-operative and an interview with its founder Stephen Bell.

However, I was somewhat surprised to see Mr Bell's suggestion that the types of services this new organisation intends to offer to are not easily available elsewhere.

In fact the voluntary sector in Kent is already well served by a network of support and development organisations, both volunteer centres and councils for voluntary service.

Your readers can find details of their local services on the Kent Centres of Voluntary Excellence website at www.volunteercentreskent.org.uk/.

Having worked in the voluntary sector for more than 25 years I am keenly aware of the need for good infrastructure services and so welcome any initiative which can strengthen the support available, especially in the current economic climate.

I do, however, hope Mr Bell and his new organisation will consult with, and complement, the existing services and not simply reinvent the wheel.

ABC should lead the way

THE latest figures for youth unemployment in Ashford show yet another depressing increase with more than 650 of our 18 to 24-year-olds on Job Seekers Allowance – 7.6 per cent compared to the South East average of 5.7 per cent.

Meanwhile the number of those unemployed for more than 12 months has doubled since February last year.

While we, in the Ashford Independent Group, believe voluntary work experience programmes have a place, we believe more traditional apprenticeship schemes and extended work experience offer young unemployed the best route to gaining a long-term career. And it seems central government agrees by extending the minimum duration of new apprenticeships.

What is disappointing is that Ashford Borough Council has fallen woefully behind its neighbouring local authorities in supporting these excellent programmes.

With the numbers of unemployed 18-24 year olds rising across the borough, a strong Chamber of Commerce and local companies renowned for their community engagement we could, and should, be doing better.

Come on ABC, bite the bullet and take a lead.

Vagaries of inheritance tax in black and white

Q MY wife and I understand we can avoid inheritance tax by gifting property now, as long as we then live for seven years. However, would capital gains tax be payable? We have made wills leaving enough to our daughters and grandchildren to use up the tax-exempt amount, with everything above that passing to whichever of us is the survivor. This means that on the second death, anything above the exempt slice will be taxed at 40pc. Is there any publication that would help us?

A AS you clearly know, anything passing from one spouse to the other escapes inheritance tax. There are other exemptions, too, including bequests to charity. And, of course, the first £325,000 of your estate is exempt. The advantage of making major gifts now is that after seven years those gifts will drop out of your estate completely and escape inheritance tax. Capital gains tax could be due if gifts consist of stocks and shares or similar assets that would be subject to gains tax if you sold them. But gains tax is 18pc or 28pc, depending on your overall tax position – well below the 40pc inheritance tax rate. And, if you gift money rather than taxable assets, there is no gains tax. The consumer organisation Which? publishes a useful book about ways of ensuring your family will benefit rather than the taxman. Giving & Inheriting costs £10.99 from the Which? order line (01903 828 557).

Q MY parents have offered to invest £500 in premium bonds for each of our two children, who are aged four and two. My husband and I are very grateful, but we are concerned about what might happen if, say, our daughter's bonds won £1m and our son's bonds won nothing. It would affect them for the rest of their lives. Is there any legally binding way to put the full £1,000 into bonds in their joint names?

A ACCORDING to the rules, premium bonds have to be in the name of one person. They cannot be held jointly. You can get round this, though. While your children are under 16, any prizes will be paid to you, so you could simply split the money between them. However, I suppose there is always the chance that 20 years from now, the child whose bond won a big prize might ask awkward questions, or even threaten to sue you for the "missing" half that had gone to the other child. So if your parents agree, my suggestion is to register the bonds in your name. You will get a certificate for £1,000 in bonds, and you can make a note on it to say that it belongs to your children. Then you can share any prizes between them without risking one child trying later to demand the lot.

TONY HETHERINGTON
MONEY CLINIC

Q YOU wrote recently about the safety of company pension schemes. I left a company in 1986, with a pension frozen until my retirement, when it was found that pension funds were missing. Did the Pension Protection Fund that you mentioned only affect pension schemes after it was launched in 2005, and how quickly does it step in and start payments to pensioners? Is there any link between it and something called the Financial Assistance Scheme?

A THE Pension Protection Fund was set up by Parliament in 2004, to help people whose company pension scheme had gone bust. The key date is April 6, 2005, when it opened for business. The PPF can help only if the pension scheme got into trouble and started to be wound up on or after that date. The fund aims to step in within 28 days of problems arising and take over payments at 90pc-100pc of agreed pensions. The similar Financial Assistance Scheme is now run by the PPF, but can help members of pension schemes already in trouble before the PPF began.

Q PLEASE explain how advertisements can suggest putting £10,680 into a tax-free Isa scheme when the legal limit is only £5,340. Are the advertisements aimed at couples?

A THERE are two types of individual savings account (Isa). You can put £10,680 into a stocks and shares Isa, or up to £5,340 in a cash Isa and the balance into shares, as long as you do not exceed £10,680 in all.

Q I AM 18 and earn less than the tax threshold but I still have to pay national insurance. Why are the starting points not the same?

A THE tax and national insurance systems developed separately. The Government would like to merge them with the same thresholds, but this is not easy. People already retired have paid for their state pensions and now pay no more national insurance, so merging the two systems would mean pensioners paying extra tax for no extra benefit.

Paying hidden price for overseas transactions

Be careful how you use your debit card abroad, otherwise the charges can quickly mount up, says ADAM AIKEN

DEBIT cards are seen by many people as the easy way to pay for goods and services.

They are accepted in most shops, you can often use them to get cash-back when you make a purchase, you can use them online, and they are free to use.

Well, up to a point...

Debit cards might be free to use in the UK, but if you try to use one while you are abroad, you are likely to be stung with high charges, for both purchases and cash withdrawals.

Occasional usage is probably bearable for most people, but it won't take long for these charges to mount up if you use a card overseas regularly.

"Debit card charges for overseas transactions continue to be a major bugbear for consumers," said Andrew Hagger, a spokesman for Money.net.co.uk.

"While a debit card costs you nothing to use in the UK, in the majority of cases you will be charged for cash withdrawals and purchases when abroad.

"Many customers choose their current accounts based on the credit or debit interest rates, yet for people who travel abroad, a fee-free debit card could save them far more over the course of a year."

A few providers, such as Metro Bank, and Norwich and Peterborough Building Society, offer fee-free debit cards, but the vast majority of cards come with high charges. And most of these cards impose not one, but two charges every time they are used – a foreign loading fee plus a transaction or withdrawal fee.

If you were charged a loading fee of 2.75pc and a withdrawal fee of 2pc, you would be stung for £4.75 for making a withdrawal of £100 in foreign currency. And don't forget that banks and building societies also impose their own exchange rates on you when they convert your transactions into sterling.

Mr Hagger said: "If you look at a scenario in which a family is on holiday for two weeks in the sun, and they make five cash withdrawals of the equivalent of £100 and eight debit card purchases worth £50, they could easily be faced with a total charges bill of £45 or £50."

People would never entertain the idea of using a cash card in the UK that charged you so much for withdrawing our own money, but we seem to be more accepting of it when it comes to overseas use.

Louise Holmes, a spokesman for

TIPS ON USING DEBT CARDS ABROAD

- 1) Debit cards are linked to current accounts, so check your account balance (and overdraft facility, if relevant) before you go.
- 2) Check the expiry date on your card. You don't want it running out while you're abroad.
- 3) Find out how much you will be charged for purchases and cash withdrawals. For example, it's possible that making a few, larger withdrawals will cost you less than making many smaller ones.
- 4) Let your bank or building society know you will be overseas. If you do not do this, you run the risk that your card provider sees foreign transactions as fraudulent, and blocks the card.

DYNAMIC CURRENCY CONVERSION

WHETHER or not you have a debit card that charges you for using it abroad, take care not to fall for "dynamic currency conversion".

This is the idea that a retailer or a restaurateur offers you the chance to pay in either local currency or sterling. Although your initial thought might be to be paid in sterling, you'll almost certainly lose out.

"While this sounds a good idea in that you know how much you'll be charged, the problem is that it gives the retailer the opportunity to use an uncompetitive exchange rate, which could see you paying over the odds by 3pc or 4pc," said Andrew Hagger at Money.net.

In most all situations, complete the transaction in the local currency and let your bank make the conversion at its own exchange rate.

Moneyfacts.co.uk, said planning was key for travellers who did not have fee-free cards.

"Many of us are used to free banking, so it can be easy to assume we won't be charged for using our debit cards overseas," she said.

"This can be a costly mistake, however, with charges applied both for taking money out of a cash machine and for making purchases in stores abroad. Minimum charges will apply when withdrawing cash abroad, so it may be worth planning a few days ahead based on your plans for the holiday.

"In the midst of having fun, it can be difficult to keep a close eye on spending and overseas charges can soon mount up."

Mr Hagger added: "It is better that you are aware of these charges before you jet off, rather than get a nasty shock when you get home, so contact your bank to find out what charges are applicable for both purchases and cash transactions when outside the UK.

"At least if you understand the overseas charges, you can adjust your spending pattern accordingly.

"For example, you don't want to be making cash withdrawals or purchases of £10 or £20 if you're going to be hit with charges of £1.50-plus each time."

Business Week

Your business is our business

Getting the high street moving

An obvious indicator of the health of the British economy is the high street. Online sales account for an ever-increasing chunk of the retail trade, but footfall in shops is vital to the business health of a community, with cash coming in at the sharp end of trade. Last month the Business Week team took a walk down Hythe high street to gauge how stores were coping in the face of economic uncertainty, while the Labour Party has been canvassing the same businesses and asking what they need to prosper. And in addition to all this, the Government has appointed retail guru Mary Portas to give her thoughts about possible solutions. Nick Ames investigates further how we can pull our high streets out of trouble.

FREE parking is the No 1 priority if businesses are to prosper in troubled Hythe high street, according to a survey by the Labour Party.

In a poll of 76 businesses conducted earlier this year, free parking emerged as almost twice as important as any other issue.

About half the businesses polled wanted at least two hours' free parking for shoppers in the high street, with just 2 per cent of shopkeepers suggesting that free parking should be for less than the one-hour period currently available.

In an article earlier this year, Business Week showed how declining footfall and the economic situation was putting many shops in the town under threat of closure.

Retailers called for any help they could get in attracting new custom – and parking was the main area identified as they said customers visiting supermarkets had to park too far away from smaller stores and were discouraged from casual visits.

Matt Hillyer, producer of the survey, said he was surprised at the result. "We didn't expect parking to rate as more important than business rates or advertising, but the response has been almost unanimous," he said.

"The shop-owners we spoke to thought it was the easiest and most effective way to bring people to Hythe and gave them an even platform on which to compete with the supermarkets. Two hours' free parking was viewed as the ideal length of time for customers to spend in town."

The survey coincides with Shepway District Council's draft parking strategy, which suggests reducing free on-street parking to 30 minutes in

TOUGH NUT:

Many retailers and shop-owners in Hythe high street were adamant that more free parking would increase footfall and bring a change of fortune for businesses high streets, in a bid to persuade drivers to park in under-used car parks.

"The council should listen to the businesses in the high streets and increase the time limits to allow people to shop for longer," said Peter Wallace, secretary of the local Labour group.

"We've heard from the shops, particularly the restaurants, cafés and hairdressers, that they want at least two hours' free parking for their customers, because one hour isn't enough.

"If the council make those changes, we predict Shepway could attract thousands more customers to our towns per year, as well as bringing countless other benefits."

Across the town centre, shop-owners have reported that takings at the till are down dramatically, footfall is declining and rents are increasing – all factors that they say could see some stores closing their doors by the end of the year.

Typical problems are those experienced by Alan Fairbairn and his wife Susan, who run Trouvailles antiques store. They say that takings are down two-thirds from their peak and rent has increased by half.

"We took over a 16-year lease on the shop," said Mr Fairbairn. "There is provision for an increase in rent in the contract, but nothing for a cut when takings are down – as they are."

Mrs Fairbairn explained how the business had suffered over recent years.

"There was a time when the value of antiques was really high," she said. "But the market has decreased in the last few years. We have a lot of stock which we bought during the boom time but are having to sell at a loss.

"People wanted the feel-good factor of buying as little as 18 months ago, but now they just aren't."

Could £10 market stalls point more prosperous way ahead?

A BUSINESS survey has revealed that in 2011 the larger high-street chains closed an average of 14 stores a day across Britain.

So in this difficult retail market, chartered-accountancy group ICAEW is encouraging entrepreneurs to take advantage of a Government-backed scheme offering market stalls for £10 over a fortnight this summer.

For those starting a new business or wishing to extend an existing venture, it says the Love Your Local Market campaign offers a low-cost, low-risk way to test a new product.

The market-stall initiative will run from Saturday, June 23, to Sunday, July 8, and is the first official response to the Portas Review – an independent review of the English high street undertaken by Mary Portas, a leading marketing consultant appointed by Prime Minister David Cameron.

Ashford, hit badly by store closures, is applying to be one of 12 'Portas Pilots' – towns that will share a £1 million Government handout in a bid to turn around their high streets.

Ms Portas has called for a National Market Day to promote markets and allow budding shopkeepers to try their hand at operating a low-cost retail business.

The review also urged that unnecessary

HELPING HAND:

Mary Portas used by the Government regulations be removed to make it easier for people to become market-traders.

Fay Webster, ICAEW's South East regional director, said: "Market trading allows entrepreneurs to be flexible and take their trade to customers without being tied into expensive long-term property leases.

"It is a great way to test their offering in a low-cost, risk-free environment.

"The old model of starting in retail with an immediate commitment to a shop in a town centre has been challenged by online and out-of-town shopping. New retailers have to be convinced that there is a sufficient demand for their product before committing to a lease."

The Love Your Local Market scheme provides a great platform to get a new business idea off the ground without incorporating unnecessary costs.

Traders will get to interact with the public and fellow traders and build a good network of customers and colleagues and a sense of community.

"The scheme gives budding retailers the opportunity and space to develop and flourish in a friendly, relaxed environment," said Webster.

"Market stalls, such as Christmas markets, have always succeeded in bringing people together to sell, share and socialise and are a fantastic testing ground for entrepreneurs introducing a new product."

Telecare has its finger on the pulse of heart patients way out west

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

HEALTHCARE specialist Red Alert Telecare, based in Ashford, has landed a contract to support heart-disease patients across Dorset.

The company will be installing and maintaining monitoring devices that will allow hundreds of people to remain living safely and independently at home.

By carrying out their own daily checks on a number of vital health indicators and forwarding the data to their GP or health specialist, the 500 coronary-care patients will be able to live normal lives, safe in the knowledge that any issues will be flagged up by the technology and will alert medical help.

Two years ago, Red Alert Telecare played a leading role in a Department of Health trial – called a whole-systems demonstrator – that proved the merits of the life-changing technology, known as 'telehealth'.

Now the company is working with leading provider Telehealth Solutions to install its technology in homes across the West Country county on behalf of NHS Dorset, Bournemouth and Poole.

The equipment, which is freely available to those with long-term chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, allows people to monitor their blood pressure, blood oxygen level, weight and heart rate and record the results using a simple, menu-driven touch-screen tablet computer.

It also asks a number of routine questions about how the patient is feeling.

"This is remarkable technology and it can make a huge difference to patients who would otherwise have to visit outpatients for regular checks or contact their GP if they thought something might be wrong," said Red Alert Telecare managing director Clive Gawler.

"It has been clearly demonstrated that this type of equipment reduces emergency admissions to hospital and, more importantly, has saved lives by drawing attention to potentially fatal conditions."

"We are delighted to be working with Red Alert on this important project," said Tim Shaw, operations director at Telehealth Solutions.

"Installing and maintaining this technology is not just specialised but plays a vital part in ensuring that the systems work correctly."

When the data has been collected, the patient sends it to a central computer using a roaming mobile-phone connection and it is compared against that person's normal parameters.

Gawler said: "If anything is flagged up as being unusual, the system alerts the right medical person, who can then take action."

"It allows the patient to become more involved in managing their own condition and prevents them undertaking what might be a long or difficult journey for a check-up that just proves nothing has changed."

"As well as giving people back their independence, telehealth has the potential to save the health service millions of pounds in unnecessary appointments and emergency admissions, as well as freeing up professionals' time and hospital beds."

Aussie flat-packing is good business sense

HYTHE company Gopak is investing for the future and flying the flag for Britain as it faces competition in the market from Chinese imports.

The business, which produces lightweight folding tables for customers including schools, community halls and churches, has recently expanded its operations after acquiring a licence to produce a product designed in Australia.

"The last four years have been very challenging," said managing director Andrew Fieldwick, above.

"But when the Australian opportunity came along, we had to take it. We worked out how to flat-pack the design and so went ahead with investing in expanded premises."

"The investment was at a difficult time, but we took a long-term view so that when the market does pick up we will be in a position to capitalise."

"These are the sort of decisions you cannot afford to get wrong. It was a brave move, but the company has a strong financial base, so we were able to do it without borrowing."

Competition in the marketplace has also been a factor in Gopak's decision.

Diane Ponting, sales and marketing director, said: "Buying from importers may give you just a standard design, but we have thousands of different ones which can accommodate any need or requirement."

'We need women' say building chiefs

CONSTRUCTION companies in Kent and the South East should take steps to attract more females to meet the industry's need to find top talent, according to a survey conducted on the CITB-ConstructionSkills website.

The survey showed that most respondents (60 per cent) felt it was important for employers to bring more females into construction in order to 'attract more talented individuals' (47.5 per cent) and to ensure the workforce better reflected society's demographics (13 per cent).

For those who thought it was not important for industry to do more to attract women (nine per cent), most suggested that activity in this area was 'just political correctness'.

Sara Pearce, sector strategy manager for CITB-ConstructionSkills South East said: "It's really encouraging to see the comments and enthusiasm around increasing the number of women in the industry – it's hugely important to have the widest possible talent pool to draw from irrespective of gender, race, sexual orientation, ethnicity or faith."

"We need quality candidates coming into the construction industry in the South East, and there are already many examples of women doing really well, but we still need to challenge some prevailing misconceptions that are damaging to our efforts to attract the best talent."

Minister's rules for young apprentices

APPRENTICESHIPS will last for a minimum of 12 months guaranteeing improvements in training and workplace learning, skills minister John Hayes has announced.

The new standards will come into force for all age groups from August, subject to consultation with providers and employers.

For those aged 19 and over apprenticeships will last between one to four years unless prior learning or attainment has been recorded. Apprenticeships for 16-18 year olds will last a minimum of 12 months without exception.

Mr Hayes said: "The momentum we have created by building the apprenticeship brand has brought about unprecedented success for the apprenticeship programme."

"The majority of apprenticeships are the gold standard in vocational training. They boost individuals' life chances and build the skills that drive growth. They also provide a great return on public money. This has been independently recognised with the National Audit Office finding that apprenticeships generate £18 for the economy for every £1 spent."

"But we must be relentless in our drive to ensure all apprenticeships are as good as the best."

College head defends apprenticeship schemes

MIDKENT College acting principal Sue McLeod has come out in defence of apprenticeships following criticism of the training schemes by the BBC's flagship current affairs show Panorama.

The BBC One show last week featured examples of bad practice in the further education sector, and criticised some colleges' use of subcontractors in delivering work-based training.

The programme claimed there was little scrutiny over how public money was being spent on the schemes.

However, Ms McLeod offered a strong defence of apprenticeships, and was keen to stress that the actions of a minority should not undermine the true value and worth of training programmes.

She said: "Apprenticeships are an important way of preparing young people for employment and are vital to the Government's strategy for economic recovery."

"At a time when youth unemployment is high, we should be doing all we can to champion a scheme that for many years has linked up local and national firms with hard-working trainees for the benefit of everyone involved."

"MidKent College is approved by the Skills Funding Agency to offer both apprenticeships and advanced apprenticeships, and it is in our best interests to provide the best education possible for those who rely on us to help them into employment."

"In respect to subcontractors – which the Government supports the use of – we only use those who meet our high expectations."

Earlier this year nine MidKent College apprentices lost their jobs when the Sheerness-based metalwork firm Thames-steel went bust.

But thanks to the efforts of staff in the college's business development unit and JobShop, all have now found alternative employment to enable them to complete their training.

The speed in which they found new jobs, said Ms McLeod, was largely due to the quality of training they had already received.

She added: "Our response to the Thames-steel situation is evidence of how we have the best interests of our students at heart."

"Their education and welfare is top of our list of priorities, and always will be."

"Colleges like ours are not-for-profit organisations which serve our communities for the long term. It is not in our interests to provide poor quality education."

A taskforce was been set up by Kent County Council after the closure of the Thames-steel plant in Sheerness in January and the loss of 350 jobs.

The steel firm went into administration last month with 350 of the 400 staff being told they were being made redundant.

MP for Sittingbourne and Sheppey Gordon Henderson has been trying to stop equipment at the plant from being sold abroad.

Schools & education

It's full steam ahead for Hornby's train set model-making projects

HORNBY Hobbies has teamed up with Kent County Council to give primary schools the chance to be in the driving seat and design their own train set landscapes.

The Margate-based company has sponsored the initiative to the tune of more than £7,000.

While creating their individual models, pupils have been learning how to plan a project, draw to scale, build the base-board, learn how electricity works, design the layout of the track, connect up circuits and motors, build scale buildings, and how trains shunt engines and wagons.

KCC leader Cllr Paul Carter said: "This is a new venture for us and we are grateful to Hornby for providing the equipment to make it happen."

"The response from schools just emphasises the enthusiasm of teachers to find new ways of motivating young people to learn new skills while having fun."

Each school, with the help of KCC Local members, will be provided with a train and track to create a portable shelf-style layout on a board 75cm x 200cm. Each school can develop its own ideas for the model and can add trains, track, countryside and infrastructure to the scene.

More than 100 schools have applied for the 50 train sets available. All the sets have been distributed and schools are beginning the model-making project.

Designers get their stripes with Radio 4 slimming clothes test

FASHION design students at the University for the Creative Arts (UCA) Rochester have been working with Radio 4 to settle the age-old question of whether stripes really can make you look thinner.

Val Watham, a finalist on Radio 4's So You Want to Be a Scientist, devised an experiment to test whether stripes affect people's perception of size. She then turned to UCA for help.

A team of volunteers from the fashion design course made up a range of shirts and dresses with the stripes positioned horizontally and vertically. Students were then filmed wearing each of the dresses and shirts, plus a plain black alternative. Visitors to the BBC Science tent at Edinburgh Science Festival in April will be asked to watch the videos and estimate what size the model is in each of the clips.

To make sure the study is scientifically valid, Val has also been working with psychologist Dr Peter Thompson from the University of York.

He is an expert in visual perception and has helped to design the test that will be carried out at Edinburgh Science Festival.

Val said: "Working with UCA has been a great experience – the students have been fantastic. Not only have they made up the garments, but they also volunteered to act as models.

"I hope that the data we gather from this experiment will shed more light on the way different patterns affect our perception of size."

Thomas Williams, one of the first year fashion design students who volunteered to make the garments, said: "I was really excited at having the opportunity to work with the BBC."

Fellow student Luq Ali added: "I own loads of stripy clothes and I definitely do think they have an impact on perception of size. I can't wait until the findings are revealed (in June)."

Medal success for college students' union in build up to Olympic Games

CANTERBURY College Students' Union has collected an award for its Olympian efforts.

The SU won a bronze medal for Living the Olympic Values at the Podium Awards 2012, beating more than 200 colleges and universities.

The judges were impressed with the college's delivery of the Olympic values – courage, determination, equality, excellence, friendship, inspiration, and respect.

It is the latest honour to be bestowed on Canterbury College's SU, which recently won a NUS Award for a record-breaking fourth consecutive year.

Student's Union president Tony Payne said: "We have been working hard to get students inspired about the London 2012 Games for the past four years, so it's great to win a Podium Award."

"This is the fifth year the college has been nominated for an award based on the quality of our extra-curricular activities and it's a real testament to the commitment of the students here."

"I'm really looking forward to seeing the Olympic Park and taking students to some of the events."

The Podium Awards recognise the role colleges and universities play in delivering the London 2012 Games. Canterbury College Student's Union will receive its award at a black-tie event in London next month.

BUSINESS

Companies are taking the direct approach to business success

THE get-up-and-go attitude shown by businesses in Kent is never more important than at times of economic uncertainty.

Embracing new technologies, exploiting export opportunities and forward-thinking are all ways that companies can grow and prosper.

Business leaders across the county are always keen to showcase what Kent has to offer – especially the top-class facilities and the local motivated and skilled workforce.

Roger House, chairman of the Federation of Small Businesses in Kent and Medway, said: "Kent is a great place to do business, the Garden of England twist London and Europe. In addition to the Kent Science Park at Sittingbourne we now have Discovery Park on the Pfizer site at Sandwich, creating unique opportunities for small businesses to gain access to high-grade pharmaceutical facilities."

Education is also a vital part of the county's appeal to business, and companies are always looking at ways to work alongside schools and colleges so that they can explain what business needs to the next generation of the workforce.

Careers and jobs affairs are held across the county to bring young people face to face with the market place, while the county is also successful in bringing forward new entrepreneurs.

Martin Crowther, director of VR Sani-Co in Herne Bay, said: "Having university business schools on the doorstep provides easy access to high-quality skills and knowledge transfer to enable local firms to become more productive."

The transport links that provide unparalleled access to London, the

HARD WORK AND VISION: Sonja Wood won two Institute of Directors awards; she was the only woman to reach the finals rest of the UK and the Continent are another important factor in the county's business success.

Tony Pringle, tpplast Ltd proprietor, said: "With two international stations in the county we have much-improved opportunities for doing business in Europe, and the introduction of the high-speed train service from Canterbury West has significantly reduced travel time to many towns and cities in the Midlands.

"This reduces the need to drive and creates the opportunity of working while travelling."

Typical of the forward thinking shown by Kent businesses is the director of a washroom recycling business who cleaned up at a prestigious business-awards event – the Institute of Directors London and South East director of the year, sponsored by Pricewaterhouse Coopers.

Sonja Wood, director of Ashford-based EcoSan Services, won two awards at the London ceremony: director of the year for a business up to £4.99 million category and new business director of the year. She was the only female director to reach the finals of this year's awards.

EcoSan offers eco-friendly washroom solutions to businesses in every sector. It was the first southern-based business to offer sanitary, nappy and incontinence recycling and recently recorded another first by recycling chewing gum.

Previously, EcoSan won the 2011 KEiBA award for business commitment to the environment, while Wood was 2011 finalist for entrepreneur of the year.

She said: "I am incredibly proud as to have won these two awards and I am looking forward to taking part in the national finals as an ambassador for the south of England. I hope my success will inspire more women to become directors as I feel there is a shortage in this country."

Wood received her award at a ceremony at London's Landmark Hotel attended by 300 people.

Rodger Broad, director for the IoD in the South East, said: "The IoD London and the South director of the year awards serve to remind people just how talented and driven our region's business leaders are."

"The South East is the powerhouse of the UK economy and the efforts of directors such as Sonja and our other winners, along with many, many others around the region, will help drive the UK's economic recovery."

"Her success in this year's awards is just reward for her hard work and vision and I congratulate her."

INNOVATION

Enterprising trainers are needed to help meet demand for new international qualification

DEVELOPERS are on the hunt for training providers to help meet demand for a new qualification.

The Real Ideas Organisation's (RIO's) Social Enterprise Qualification (SEQ) was launched at the House of Commons in January and now it needs to find would-be SEQ mentors to train to deliver the qualification across the UK.

The first stand-alone international qualification in social enterprise, SEQ is a new way to recognise and encourage young people and adults working for positive social change.

By focusing on learning through doing, the qualification develops learners' understanding and experience of social enterprise so that with the support of SEQ mentors they can discover how to balance people, planet and profit for themselves.

Since its successful pilot in 2010-11, SEQ has been taken up by learners nationwide. RIO relies on its network of training providers to offer the essential training SEQ mentors need, to support these learners through the qualification process.

With interest in SEQ already surpassing expectations, the team is searching for new organisations with specific skills and experience delivering work-related learning programmes interested in joining its second raft of training providers. Providers get a whole host of benefits, from the financial return of running training to the opportunities that come from engaging with a growing and buoyant business sector.

Paula Winzar, RIO lead developer and creator of SEQ, said: "We rely on our excellent training providers to make SEQ happen and we're excited about getting more organisations practised in working with young people, communities and volunteers onboard. There's a clear financial incentive to becoming an SEQ training provider, but for many of the organisations we work with it's about more than that.

"They want to network with schools and youth organisations and reach new audiences but most of all help young people to become the change-making social entrepreneurs of the future."

For those successfully-selected organisations, SEQ's recruitment drive marks an opportunity to become part of an innovative venture that is changing the face and future of social enterprise.

TRAINING

Apprentice Abbey is picking up skills while she works

DON'T tell Sir Alan Sugar, but there's a new apprentice in town – 17-year-old Abbey Brown has joined Kent Science Park-based health and safety consultancy The Bradley Group as its full-time trainee.

Foregoing the traditional A-level route, Abbey is opting instead to join the workforce and learn practical business skills from the thriving Sittingbourne business.

Abbey, who lives in Sheppey, left Fulston Manor School earlier this year after deciding she wanted to go down the on-the-job training route, having attended an apprenticeship day at Sheppey College.

She then spoke to a career adviser, who put her forward for the role at The Bradley Group, and she ended up being successfully chosen from the 20 or so applicants who applied for the position.

Abbey spoke about her delight at getting the job and her future ambitions: "I'm extremely excited about the job here. When I first spoke to an adviser about undertaking an apprenticeship, they asked me what areas I was looking to develop my career in. I said I was keen to learn about business and administration and that I liked working with numbers.

"They suggested I go for the role at The Bradley Group as it would be a great place to develop my skills and increase my knowledge.

"I think I'm settling into my role quite well, but it's still early days. Everyone on the team has been extremely welcoming and made me feel like part of the family already. It's such a lovely environment to be working in."

Jan Mills, managing director at The Bradley Group, said of Abbey and her new role in the team: "We're thrilled Abbey will be joining our team at The Bradley Group.

"She stood out in her interviews by showing enthusiasm, determination and willingness to learn. It's important to me that Abbey's apprenticeship allows her to experience all elements of the business.

"We've already arranged for her to go out and shadow one of our consultants so she can get a feel of what we do for our clients.

"She'll also be sitting in on training courses, so she can see what they entail, and I'm planning for her to spend some time getting to know our finance, HR and marketing systems.

"We want her to learn skills that she'll use for the rest of her career – we're not going to be expecting her to just sort the mail and get tea."

James Speck, site director at Kent Science Park, said: "It's wonderful to see The Bradley Group going from strength to strength, especially with the addition of Abbey to their team.

"It's outstanding that they've taken on an apprentice as it is vital that we all keep creating job opportunities for younger generations, and working for a flourishing organisation like The Bradley Group will give Abbey the chance to gain valuable experience in a company that's continuing to grow and develop."

THE INTERVIEW

Paul Merton

NOT quite ready to be placed in Room 101 just yet, panel-show regular and comedic TV star Paul Merton is bringing his new stand-up show to Kent this month.

Out Of My Head is Merton's first newly-written show since 1998, but getting back on the horse can't have been too daunting for the Have I Got News For You funnyman as he has already bagged a whopping 50 dates for this tour.

The new show will give fans an unprecedented insight into the wondrous workings of Merton's mind. The stand-up will be interspersed with sketches, music, magic, variety and perhaps even some dancing girls.

Merton has been at the top of his game for more than two decades, serving a massive 22 years behind the Have I Got News For You desk with Ian Hislop. However, for the coming tour Merton will be joining up with pals Lee Simpson, Richard Vranich and Suki Webster, who all take part in the show.

He said: "We're having such a great time. It's about taking the plunge and devising a show that is fully scripted. It has stand-up, sketches, interaction with the audience and a few things that will startle people. Working on a tour that starts off as a mere jotting on the back of a fag packet and develops into a spectacular show is a sheer joy."

Having been a key member of the country's most famous improvisational troupe, The Comedy Store Players, since its formation in 1985, Merton is an expert in doing things off the cuff.

He said: "I get such a buzz from performing live. It's the best rush in the world – better than anything else you can think of. If you're trying to convince a TV producer that something is funny, it can take ages. But if you have a good idea with The Comedy Store Players, you just say it there and then."

"You don't have to take it to a commissioning editor, or get a budget and have the comedy kicked out of it by a committee. And you immediately know whether it's funny because you'll hear the sound of laughter – or not."

Merton has also enjoyed a successful career as a travel-documentary presenter, producing memorable pieces such as Paul Merton In China, Paul Merton In India, Paul Merton In Europe and Paul Merton's Adventures. But, as he explained, there is still nothing to compare to the stand-up game.

He said: "It's so inspiring. You just ride the

Have I got stand-up for you Ever wondered what goes on in Paul Merton's head? Now you can find out wave of laughter and then you might come up with something. Ralph Richardson used to talk about pushing a huge ball up a hill to the point where it gains momentum and starts rolling down the other side. That's what live comedy is like. The only snag is, you have to do it while trying to look completely relaxed."

The comedian stays 'in the zone' by performing every week with his impro troupe, meaning he is ready for anything at all times.

He said: "That [the troupe] feeds into everything else I do. When Have I Got News For You comes around, I don't think 'Oh no, I'm a bit rusty'. Doing The Comedy Store Players every Sunday means you're match-fit all the time. It's a performance muscle. If it's not getting flexed, it gets flabby. That's why people who haven't been onstage for a while struggle when they go back to the theatre – because it's a completely different discipline."

In the Out Of My Head show, Merton will no longer have to be put on the spot, something that allows him to relax a little... but not too much.

"With this show we get to repeat moments we really enjoy. In impro, you can't go back and do it again, but here you get the chance to create a show over a sustained period of rehearsal – and that's wonderful."

It has been almost 15 years since Merton took to the stage on his own for a stand-up show and, as he explained, the experience wasn't one he wanted to repeat too often.

He said: "Having spent so many years working with other people, when I did a stand-up tour on my own in 1998 I really didn't enjoy sitting on my own in the dressing room during the interval. All the same, I'm sure I'll be sitting there on this tour thinking 'Why did I bring those guys along?'."

Out of My Head will cover a variety of themes, including the class system and the spell Merton spent in hospital after falling ill from anti-malaria tablets.

But the overriding theme of the show is imagination: "I went to a Catholic school. When I was 10, I wrote an essay which the nun who was teaching me really didn't like because it was imaginative. She didn't like imagination."

"It was one of those things that you know is desperately unfair but can't do anything about because you are only 10."

"So I began thinking 'A nun who is wrong about something so fundamental might well be wrong about other stuff, too'. Imagination has built my entire career. This show is a celebration of imagination."

The Red Lion still roars in a display of culinary pride

It is one of life's more dispiriting experiences... the well-meaning recommendation of the idyllic Kentish country pub that in fact pitches you up at some charmless 1970s box surrounded by new housing estates on the edge of town. Dispiriting and indeed increasingly frequent to the point where you wonder whether such places actually exist. The good news, however, is that they do.

Standing head and shoulders above a sea of mediocrity with, it should be stressed, a select few, is The Red Lion in Stodmarsh. But then it always has, at least for as long as I can remember.

Run for so long and so memorably by the wonderfully eccentric Robert Whigham, who enjoyed his own sliver of television fame on a show devoted to Red Lions across the country, the pub is now in the hands of his daughter Charlotte and her partner Justin Legge.

The chef is Justin's brother Darren, whose work has in recent years graced both The Old Coach And Horses in Harbledown and Riverside Restaurant Bar And Grill in Canterbury.

Justin and Darren's father was Dave Lee, the much-loved comedian who died earlier this year. All in all, you can't help but feel that here, in its way, lies a place at the heart of east Kent.

RESTAURANT REVIEW

Nevertheless, it is not a place known to the greater masses, most of whom rarely – and perhaps thankfully – stray far from the beaten track... or A road, for that matter. However, those who have chanced upon it join the locals in what can sometimes appear a celebration of simply being somewhere good.

The feel is wholly rustic and, even if the realities of the 21st century beat within us all, here's somewhere whose warm, intimate and welcoming environment takes us back to a place that perhaps many of us feel has been lost in the furore around us.

This is a pub that serves food... good food. Refreshingly, appearances here are not deceptive and I felt completely relaxed in selecting it for a meal with two friends.

Two of us started with duck hash cake with fried egg and brown sauce, which was a sheer delight, while the third of our number enjoyed her crab toasties so much she wondered whether she could have more all over again for her main.

Happily, however, there were more than enough options for her to expand her culinary experience for the evening and she selected smoked-haddock risotto with mussels, which she declared "absolutely delicious".

In what was becoming something of a theme, the third man and I again went down the same path, both choosing belly of pork ("with crackling!") and crab-apple jelly. Flawless.

Pick of the desserts was the bread-and-butter pudding with custard, while the Doom Bar ale matched the excellent food. An overall price of £91 for three could not be faulted, either.

Lovely pub, lovely village, lovely food, lovely beer. All really rather... well, lovely.

Head chef welcomed into his new Abode

THE Old Brewery Tavern in Canterbury has appointed a new head chef.

Anthony Gardiner will lead the team at the restaurant-bar, which is owned by the nearby Abode Hotel, associated with celebrity chef Michael Caines.

Kent-born Gardiner studied catering at Thanet College before working at The Fayrenew Hotel, Kingsgate, and The Royal, Ramsgate. He also took the position of head chef at Eddie Gilbert's seafood restaurant in Ramsgate.

He said: "I was very eager to work with some fantastic chefs in the industry, especially under Michael Caines. I understand the importance of locally-sourced food for the company. The new menu has some amazing dishes."

Universities wanted for culinary revolution

CATERING boffins are looking for a university to create the first food and drink engineering degree.

Universities across the country are invited to compete to become the UK's centre of excellence for food and drink and help promote the discipline as a distinct profession.

A Food And Drink Federation chief said: "A similar centre of excellence has been successfully created for the UK's dairy sector... however, a uni-based centre for food engineering won't be serving a single sector but setting standards for the entire industry."

Some planning can keep down the clutter

SPRING-CLEANING is the ideal chance to make the most of your living space by getting rid of clutter that has piled up over the winter.

And it's worth a bit of pre-planning. So before starting, how about looking at each of the problem areas in a room and figure out why the mess is there.

Why are there shoes piled up next to your doorway? Do you like people to take off their shoes when they come in? Is it because no one in your family wants to take their shoes up to their room, or there is not enough room in the cupboard for the shoes to fit?

Why are the magazines overflowing? You may have issues of Shoot! magazine from the 70s in there or a magazine you bought only for the cake recipe on the cover.

There's no point in keeping old newspapers, either. That's what recycling bins are for.

And books and CDs or DVDs – keep them together in a place where they can be found, not littering up a room randomly.

Maybe junk mail is piling up on your table. If you have a lot of different people in your home who receive mail, try giving each person in the house their own mail rack in their room.

What about switching your family to automated bill-paying? Many utility companies today allow your utility bills to be deducted from your bank account automatically. You may still receive mail concerning receipt of payment, but at least these can be filed easily without worry that you'll forget to pay.

Do you need extra coat-hooks? Would a bowl on the entry table specifically for keys eliminate the chances of having to dash around the house for 15 minutes in search of them every morning?

Try to come up with brainstorming ideas for each problem.

It's easy to find solutions to the problems that annoy you most.

Call your friends and ask them what they do.

Enlist your family's help to find out what would enable them to organise more effectively – that way everyone has a voice.

Fashion accessories brought into focus Summer trending

McArthurGlen designer outlet, Ashford

deborah.eastlake@mcarthurglen.com

THE McArthurGlen style consultant, Deborah Eastlake, will be hosting an Accessories Masterclass to show off this summer's hottest designs and trends. Fashion buffs are encouraged to head down to the outlet centre on Saturday, April 21, to find out which items are hot off the 2012 catwalks. "After the whirlwind of Fashion Week, one of the recurring trends that prevailed was to accessorise, accessorise, accessorise!" said Deborah. "As a key trend this summer, it is important to get it right. Over-accessorising can make outfits too gaudy, while under-accessorising can make it fade into the background." The masterclass will take place at 10am at the Style Suite in the southern end of the centre. To book your place, contact Deborah Eastlake on deborah.eastlake@mcarthurglen.com.

Developer is building for the future

A PROPERTY firm has redeveloped a vacant site in the centre of Sevenoaks and begun the sale of residential apartments and commercial units, following a loan from Lloyds TSB Commercial.

Purelake New Homes, a property-development company that focuses on both residential and commercial properties across west Kent, is completing work on a new building in London Road, next to Sevenoaks train station.

While the entire project is due for completion by early summer, the first half of the 24 mainly two-bedroom apartments have come on the market following the rapid sale of all four of the commercial units at street level below, with 70 per cent of the residential units now either reserved or exchanged.

The business has a turnover of about £20 million and employs 38 staff, in addition to a number of regular locally-based subcontractors, and also plans further expansion in the year upon completion of the work at the Sevenoaks site.

Gerry Dowd, financial director, said: "The new development is already proving to be a success, with all the retail units taken early on.

"We're looking for new expansion opportunities for later in the year to ensure that we build upon our recent growth for the future."

Home Exchange could be answer to your prayers

DEVELOPER Bovis Homes says the company is in the market to help young families who feel they are trapped in their current home and are unable to move, via a Home Exchange scheme.

One couple who have recently managed a move are Carley and Justin Hodge, who said they didn't see a way out of their small starter home which they were quickly outgrowing.

With three children under the age of six, they were beginning to feel boxed in. The combination of a slow housing market and little interest in their home – which had been on the market for a year – meant options appeared limited.

But the couple found Abbey Place, a new development by Bovis Homes off Thistle Hill on the Isle of Sheppey, and have just moved into a five-bedroom detached home.

Carley said: "We had no intention of moving to Minster, as our children were in school in Iwade, but we thought we'd have a look as we knew Bovis were doing part-exchange.

"As soon as we walked through the front door, though, we just fell in love with it.

"We have a large kitchen, living room and separate dining room.

"Our bedroom is big, the children each have their own room – with my daughter even having her own en-suite – and we have a nice landing, a good-size garden and a double garage.

"In our house in Iwade we had two of the children in one room and one in a tiny box room. We desperately needed more space."

Chris Roads, sales operations director at Bovis

HAPPY DAYS: Hodge family found dream home

Homes, said: "We are delighted to have been able to help Justin and Carley find their dream home.

"It is becoming increasingly difficult for young families to move up the property ladder, but our Home Exchange scheme has been designed to help."

Prices at Abbey Place start at £107,950, with a selection of two-bedroom apartments and coach houses, three-bedroom terraced houses and town houses and four-bedroom detached houses available.

Scheme aims to beat the deposit gap

AN INNOVATIVE move to help the property market to move more quickly and so boost the overall economic prospects of the UK by aiding those looking to move on to the housing ladder has been launched.

NewBuy is the result of a collaboration between the private sector and central government, with both recognising that many people are unable to purchase a home or move house because of the large deposits required in today's difficult mortgage market.

The NewBuy scheme is designed to help overcome the deposit gap for new-home-buyers.

It is aimed at first-time buyers and those who already own a home who only have funds for a 5-10 per cent deposit on the home they wish to buy in England.

The lenders participating in the scheme will provide a 90-95 per cent loan-to-value mortgage for buyers meeting their qualifying criteria.

The scheme will be operated by the home-building industry and mortgage lenders – the banks and building societies – working in partnership with the Government.

The scheme is designed to protect the lenders against losses in the unfortunate event of a repossession, which is why they are prepared to make 90-95 per cent mortgages available.

But those behind the project say that is important to note this does not change a borrower's responsibility to repay the mortgage in any way.

NewBuy is available in Kent on all the properties offered by home-builders participating in the scheme up to and including a sale price of £500,000.

Only new homes built by house-builders signed up to the scheme will qualify, but most major and many smaller builders are in the process of registering.

Under the scheme, individual home-builders will partner up with one or more mortgage lenders, which will offer 90-95 per cent loans on their properties.

New-home-buyers wishing to take advantage of the scheme will need to qualify for a mortgage with a mortgage lender in the usual way and be subject to the lender's normal assessment criteria.

However, whereas in recent years lenders have generally required larger deposits, the scheme will allow loans to be secured at 90-95 per cent of the property's value, meaning the purchaser only needs to find a 5-10 per cent deposit.

NewBuy advisers suggest that those looking to take part in the scheme check the websites of home-builders building in your area, or make a trip down to a building-development site and ask the sales staff if their homes are covered by the NewBuy scheme.

A spokesman said: "Once you have found a new home to meet your needs from a participating home-builder, you can either speak to an independent financial adviser, who will assess your mortgage requirements and advise you on the best mortgage product for you, or speak directly to a lender participating in the scheme.

"If a NewBuy mortgage is suitable, the next step will be to apply for a mortgage with the appropriate lender. Once you have your mortgage offer and you have reserved your new home, you are on the way to becoming a proud new-home-owner."

The scheme has a few special requirements that potential buyers need to be aware of:

- It is available to UK citizens and those with a right to remain indefinitely in the country.
- It covers full home ownership only, so it is not available for shared equity or shared ownership.
- It is available for the purchase of a person's primary home only, so not for second homes or investment or buy-to-let purchases.
- It only applies to capital repayment mortgages, not interest-only mortgages.
- You must not be receiving help with your deposit from a local authority or other public body.

Those who are interested in finding out more about the new-home sites in a local area offering NewBuy should refer to local home-builders. They can Google-search to find participating home-builders, or refer to one of the property-search websites such as New-homes.co.uk or Rightmove.co.uk.

More on what consumers need to know when considering a NewBuy mortgage can be found at www.cml.org.uk/cml/consumers/newbuy.

Quality and comfort on offer at The Maples

A FOUR-bedroom detached family home tucked away in The Maples, a quiet private cul-de-sac just off the popular Hoads Wood Gardens at the top end of Sandyhurst Lane in Ashford, has just come on to the market.

With a price range of £435,000-£465,000 the address at 32 Hoads Wood gardens is on offer from estate-agency Bradley Bishop.

Quality and comfort sum up what this home has to offer. The entrance hall is large and inviting, while the lounge stretches across the full width of the building to the rear, with three French doors bringing the outside in.

The kitchen, with its modern fitted units, granite worktops and overall quality finishes, is the hub of the home.

Upstairs are the master bedroom with its big en-suite bathroom and a further en-suite to bedroom two, making an ideal teenager's bedroom or guest room.

There are also two further good-size double rooms and a family bathroom. An added attraction is the facility for all rooms to have a Sky TV connection

The rear garden has its own courtesy gate to the woodlands on to which it backs; it is more than 145ft long and has a patio.

The surrounding countryside is attractive, with the village of Boughton Aluph and Challock Forest close by.

The nearest town is Ashford, about three miles away, which has excellent road and rail transport links, including the high-speed train to London St Pancras, which leaves twice an hour during the day and takes just 37 minutes to reach its destination.

■ To arrange a viewing, phone Bradley Bishop on 01233 627161.

AFTER some years in the creative doldrums, nobody could say that Citroën isn't now back to its maverick best.

We've had the C5 attack German premium marques with its teutonic styling, the DS3 take a pop at BMW's lucrative Mini sales, and there's even a C6 luxury model evoking memories of the original DS series from 1955-75 – it isn't a great seller but has focused attention on the brand.

And now we have the latest new-age DS, taking on premium SUVs like the Audi Q3 and BMW X1 and X3 – what will the French marque have a go at next?

Even then it's not easy to define the new DS5, since it looks a different car from all angles: it's tall, but it's long – and yet it's shorter than you think.

The bit we can nail down is that it costs from £22,400, ranging up to £32,200 for the flagship DSport spec with Hybrid4 powertrain – counterpart to sister brand Peugeot's 3008 Hybrid4 that's also just hit the market.

The hybrid format (from £27,600) brings the DS5 into conflict with all-wheel drive SUVs by virtue of the electric power to rear wheels – the front ones are powered conventionally by the car's 163bhp 2.0-litre diesel engine.

Citroën obviously fancies winding up the Germans again by appealing particularly to image-conscious company car user choosers who also have an eye on their tax bill.

They will note that the Hybrid4's dual powertrain can combine to deliver sparkling performance and traction, while CO2 emissions below 100g/km exempt it from both road tax and the London Congestion Charge, while business users pay a Benefit-in-Kind tax rate of just 10 per cent.

On the other hand, there are some good powertrains to choose from the cheaper models: the powerful and smooth 200bhp THP petrol unit developed jointly by Peugeot-Citroën and BMW, plus two diesel options.

And while the eye-catching exterior might, nevertheless, divide opinion you can be sure that few people will dislike the luxurious aviation-inspired cabin.

This adaptable five-door also has five full-size seats and up to 465 litres of boot space, with hi-tech goodies such as keyless access and start, a colour head-up display and a new Lane Departure Warning System (LDWS) for when the driver gets sleepy on long journeys – a potential life-rt-saver.

Perhaps not surprisingly for such an innovative car, the DS5 had already picked up several awards ahead of launch, including Top Gear magazine's Family Car of the Year award.

It also secured the maximum five-star Euro NCAP crash test rating and Citroën expects the car to appeal most to men over 35 who are "typically energetic business leaders – sophisticated, style conscious and early adopters of new technologies."

MAKING ITS MARQUE: Citroën's new DS5 continues the French car-maker's turnaround with stylish-looking cars that are now making a real impact in the motoring industry

/// DON'T LIKE ///

... after some years in the creative doldrums, nobody could say that Citroën isn't now back to its maverick best.

/// NOT SURE ///

... the car will retain its value on the used market. It might be a premium car, but Citroën is not perceived as a premium brand.

/// REALLY LIKE ///

... the DS5's defiance of categorisation. It does so with real style and class, unlike Renault's ill-fated Avantime and Vel Satis of the Noughties.

Prius larging it across Europe

TOYOTA aims to step up the competition in the hybrid race by launching the first full hybrid seven-seat MPV seen in Europe.

It will do so by extending the successful Prius petrol-electric hybrid brand; the newcomer is called the Prius+ is available to order now, with deliveries starting in July.

Prices start from £26,195 and the key version will be road tax exempt.

Citigo means 'green' for go

SKODA says its all-new ultra-economical Citigo city car is on sale from Friday, June 1, priced from £7,630.

Based on the Up model produced by parent brand VW, the Czech version is more keenly priced to uphold Skoda's status as a value champion.

With a maximum five-star crash safety rating from Euro NCAP, it is also available as a three or five-door.

Jag confirms baby roadster

JAGUAR has confirmed its stunning C-X16 two-seater concept will be turned into a production model, due out in mid-2013.

As the F-Type – slightly disguised in the picture here – it will finally advance a sports car dynasty made famous by the 1960s vintage E-Type roadster and coupé.

Like its predecessor, the F-Type will launch as a two-seat convertible.

Three-door Veloster opens new door for coupé buyers

By Sam Davison
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

HYUNDAI left the coupé sector in 2009, after a series of models, latterly delivering style plus fun, to go with the marque's familiar value.

However, with the Korean brand now riding high in the UK public eye through acclaimed mainstream 'i' models, like the newly-launched second generation i30, it was perhaps natural that Hyundai would revisit the glamour of the coupé sector.

It has done so by, typically, trying to offer more for your money than perceived rivals like the racy VW Scirocco or three-door coupé versions of standard hatchbacks such as the eye-catching Vauxhall Astra GTC.

With the Veloster (from £17,995), you get looks as arresting as the VW and Vauxhall, plus an extra side door, and the usual Hyundai value for money, high specification and five-year unlimited mileage warranty.

That additional door – kerbside for rear passengers – could be a winner for some buyers with young children, who might want a racy motor, but don't want the hassle of tipping front seats or leaning right into the back to belt up their kids.

It's also a unique proposition on the UK market; the only rival is the Mini Clubman, which also has a single rear side door, but on the wrong side – who wants their children exiting on the opposite side to the pavement?

The Veloster's extra door is nicely integrated into the car's profile and, since you never view both sides together, you'll never spot the difference anyway – though the curious will note that the rear side windows and centre pillars are different.

The overall style of the car is low slung with a particularly rakish rear roofline that, as in any coupé, compromises rear headroom, while legroom is also fairly tight.

Still, there is a decent size boot and ultimate

AN ADDED BONUS: The Veloster's additional door will appeal to those buyers who might want a racy car but don't want the hassle of tipping front seats or leaning into the back to strap in their children load area with seats folded and the Veloster has much else to recommend inside too; the brand continues its seemingly unstoppable rise in interior quality and design, although it would be nice to see some real brushed alloy highlights rather than coloured plastic versions.

The big standard fit central information/entertainment screen is well thought out and the dashboard controls are logical and nicely to hand, so the car offers coupé-style without great compromises in practicality – many canny buyers will like that a lot, in conjunction with a tempting price and that Hyundai warranty.

You also get lots for your money: our entry level 1.6 GDi model comes with alloys, rear spoiler, tyre pressure monitoring, eco drive indicator, reversing sensors and more that you wouldn't expect.

Where the car does have a problem is with its name: Veloster implies, well, velocity and this car has none of the coupé variety in its present format.

A 138bhp 1.6-litre petrol unit is the sole engine choice – for now, I hope – and it doesn't really help the car live up to its moniker.

Our test car also happened to be the six-speed DCT auto version, which is slightly slower too though fuel economy is better than the standard six-speed manual car.

By comparison, the Scirocco and Astra GTC line-ups include lively small turbocharged petrol units that deliver the performance to go with styling, and that's just what the Veloster lacks currently.

The good news is the Veloster's chassis has the potential to take the extra power; it keeps its composure and a flat stance on corners and only the lifeless steering detracts from a decent drive.

That said, many buyers won't worry about any of this when coupé looks can be had with such a practical bonus as that third side door.

M-Class 3G aims to attack 'poser 4x4s'

By Sam Davison

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IT IS perhaps a sign of our straitened times that even the well-heeled target market for the new generation Mercedes-Benz M-Class needs to be tempted by launch offers.

So those placing orders before the end of June will not only get versions of the newcomer laden with extra equipment, but also the option to upgrade to M-B's acclaimed onboard COMAND internet connectivity system for £750 – a saving of £1,380 and likely to add considerably to resale values.

For now, just two versions of the new M-Class are offered: the ML 250 Bluetec (£43,235) and ML 350 Bluetec (£46,335) diesels. Both feature seven-speed automatic gearboxes plus emissions/fuel saving start/stop.

This is the third-generation M-Class in a series that began in 1998, and M-B's designers have cleverly highlighted the genealogy by retaining the asymmetric rear side pillar, while building in more of the sharpness and creases highlighting its latest models.

This type of evolution rather than revolution is vital at this end of the market, where even wealthy buyers don't want to see residuals poleaxed by a markedly different new model.

What M-B can do though, and is making a point of, is to try and distance the new car from the 'gas guzzler' image that has dogged the once soaring 4x4/SUV market.

So both engines carry a package of the German premium marque's BlueEfficiency features, meeting stringent EU6 emissions regulations not due until 2014.

The four-cylinder 204bhp ML 250 Bluetec also offers a combined fuel consumption of 44.8 mpg with CO2 emissions from 165 g/km, figures for a car of this scale that would have astonished just a few years ago.

The 258bhp V6-engined ML 350 Bluetec is not too shabby either with figures of 39.2 mpg and 189 g/km respectively.

The other hidden upgrade M-B wants to highlight, is the car's much-improved on-road performance; the M-Class has always been one of those big 4x4s that struts its stuff off-road but tended to be woolly on a challenging road.

However, this latest version aims to take on 'poser-4x4s' like the BMW X5 and Range Rover Sport, with improved on-road performance while retaining proper off-road ability – this will put pressure on the X5 particularly, since it is far less at home than the Merc on a muddy field.

She gasped at such value. "An efficient city car with 4 years 0% APR representative low rate finance,
 4 years free servicing and 4 years Nissan Roadside Assistance..."

Computer geek Charlie Shreck predicts talented Kent side will show real byte

By Greg Miles

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

WHEN a cricketer openly admits to enjoying tampering and fiddling, it usually spells the end of their career, especially for a bowler.

But for Kent seamer Charlie Shreck, that might well be his future.

The 6ft 7inch right armer is a dab hand when it comes to computers much to the amusement of his new team mates, that is until they need a bit of help.

"I'm a bit of a computer geek," confessed the former Notts player. "I like tampering and fiddling with them."

"A lot of the guys take the mickey out of me for it, until they need some help that is."

"Maybe once I have stopped playing cricket it might be an option, I've not really considered that yet though."

As he says, his immediate future is with Kent for whom he led the attack at Headingley against Yorkshire last week with figures of 6 for 112.

It's his second spell at the St Lawrence Ground following three days he spent with Kent last summer in a loan move.

But now he is back for good, and is relishing the chance to take Kent back to the top flight.

"I only played one game before, so I was shipped in and shipped out," he said.

"I wasn't really around long enough to make an impression, it was three-and-a-bit days and I was away again. If I can say at the end of the season that we were pushing for honours then that's my target really," he said.

For now though he, like the rest of the squad are still getting to know one another after a number of arrivals including Ben Harmison, Mark Davies, Brendan Nash, Mike Powell, and new coach Jimmy Adams.

"Because there are so many new players we are all finding out different things," he said.

"It's like we have gone to a new school with all the new people joining at the same time and we have got a crew going, it's an exciting time."

"Because it's something we are all facing together, there is a bit of unity."

"It's a diverse dressing room, we've got players from Durham, some from Wales, and a few Kent guys, we have to learn the different languages. It's a fun place to be."

"It's new and refreshing to have Jimmy Adams and the different ways of putting things."

It was a solid start from the 34-year-old, as he formed what looks to be an exciting partnership with Davies.

"I think we batted very well," he said. "If we play like that every game we will be okay."

"Mark Davies was excellent in the first innings, so the rest of us can probably hold our hands up and say we didn't back him up."

There was also an encouraging performance from youngster Matt Coles who scored his maiden century.

"He's got a lot of talent," said Shreck. "He had a winter on the performance programme, and he's got a new confidence."

"It's nice to have such a young talent there ready to be able to jump in."

Joining Kent was an opportunity Shreck couldn't turn down as he looked to get his career back on track after a frustrating period on the sidelines.

"I have had various injuries over the last two years that have hindered my playing time," he said.

"I would like to play for as long as I can if my body can hold out."

"When you get to my age you take every year as it comes, and if it has to end, it has to end."

"I have to be realistic and honest with myself, and hope my body is back."

Young all-rounder Coles is ready to learn Jimmy Adams' great theories

HAVING a theory is all well and good in any walk of life, but in cricket, if that theory is from Jimmy Adams then you can bet it will work.

That's the view of young Kent star Matt Coles who has wholeheartedly endorsed the ideas being brought to the table by his new coach.

The 21-year-old, who made his debut in 2009, notched his maiden century in a club record ninth-wicket stand of 153 with debutant Mark Davies in the draw against Yorkshire at Headingley last week.

"With Jimmy as a coach it makes things a lot easier, because he's a brilliant coach," he said.

"His theories are coming to the table, and they are definitely working on us all."

"Everybody really respects him and I think it was a great choice for the county and for us moving forward as a group."

"We have got to keep building on what we have been working on over the pre-season, and the results will come."

The work clearly paid off for Coles as he made short work of the Yorkshire bowling to reach his ton.

"It was brilliant, I was over the Moon," he said. "I was a bit upset that we didn't quite get the win, to top it off."

"If we had taken a couple of chances it might have been a different game."

It has given him the confidence to finally label himself as an all-rounder, having thought about it for a few years.

"I have been umming and ahing for the last few years, I have always felt I can do well with the bat, but just never really put it into action," he said.

"Now after scoring 100 last week I feel I should step up to the plate. I'm hoping that's the first of a lot more."

As well as the new label, and new theories, there have been new personalities in the dressing room at the club which haven't come quietly.

"The new lads coming in are all different, they have a bit of a laugh in the changing room," he said.

"It's definitely improved us from being a quiet county to now being a bit more noisy."

The final few threads are coming together, and everybody is in game mode now."

Coles singled out new boy Matt Powell who joined from Glamorgan as one of the big characters who has come into the side this season.

"It's because of his general chat about everything really," he said.

"He's very entertaining to listen to, especially in his Welsh accent."

Survival to play for as last game of the season looms

greg.miles@archant.co.uk

RELEGATION-THREATENED Tunbridge Wells are hoping to rely on their team spirit ahead of their do-or-die last game of the season tomorrow.

There is just one spot remaining in the London and South East Division Two drop zone, which Wells are painfully close to occupying.

But the third from bottom side could be saved from the drop even if they lose at home against mid-tabled Lewes, and other results go their way.

If Heathfield & Waldron, who are on the same number of points but above Wells on points difference, beat second bottom Deal & Bette-shanger then the result in their home clash will be irrelevant.

One side who already know their fate are Old Mid-Whitgiftian, who will finish bottom whatever happens tomorrow as they are 20 points adrift.

However Wells chairman, Roger Clarke is not content to rely on results elsewhere, and is hoping the return of last year's player of the year James Gwinnett, and their recent try-scoring form will see them to safety.

"We feel it's probably a good game to have, we have got something to play for, they haven't apart from pride," he said.

"They are playing with a lot of spirit. The one thing we are missing is a lot of players with experience, and leadership, it will be good to get James Gwinnett back in the side.

"We are planning next season as if we are going to be in this league, and if we aren't we will plan the same way. He added: "We thought we would be doing substantially better than we have done. The first half of the season was less than acceptable by a way. Since Christmas we have done a lot better."

Meanwhile Sevenoaks are at home to promotion chasing Aylesford Bulls, and are five points clear from the relegation scrap.

Coach Danny Vaughan is hoping for a strong finish from his side, and has called for more commitment to be shown.

"We have got to raise our sights higher than this year, we haven't been good enough," he said.

"It's been a very poor season I think, obviously no-one wants to finish in this position.

"We are trying to change things for next season."

Tour to South Africa to give team a boost for new season

TUNBRIDGE Wells Cricket Club are optimistic for the season ahead after starting their preparations with a trip to South Africa

Fifteen of the squad have gone to Cape Town, and between sight-seeing they have managed to play seven fixtures – losing four and winning two. The final game was being played yesterday before they flew home overnight.

It's the first time in a number of years that the club has gone abroad for its pre-season, and is a move that chairman Steve Green is hoping will pay off for the coming year.

"I am sure they have had a fantastic time," he said. "It's a good thing for the club to do, and I'm hoping some of the players have picked up a bit of form.

"It's all down to one of the members who put a huge amount of effort into organising it."

The club has a number of friendly matches lined up over the coming weekends, until their first game in the first week of May away at Beckenham Cricket Club.

"It's always tough in the Kent Premier League, but we are optimistic that we are going to do well," Mr Green added.

"We have got Rob Ferley in as coach this year, and so we are looking forward to it.

"We always start the season aiming to win whatever division we are in. Rob's aim is to win the Kent Premier Division in three years."

FOOTBALL

Players told to keep up fight in remaining fixtures

TUNBRIDGE Angels boss Tommy Warrilow has called on his players to continue to fight in the last three games of the season despite the playoffs being out of reach.

The Blue Square Bet South side could have been in with a shout of reaching the top six had they won their Easter double header.

But it was always going to be a hard ask against strong Dover and Woking sides, as they crashed 2-3 and 1-2 respectively.

The Angels travel to Weston Supremare tomorrow, who sit just two places below them in 12th.

Warrilow said: "Obviously the play-offs are out of our sight. We were aiming to keep pushing, but the couple of losses over Easter have hurt us.

"We have had two really hard games, and we have got nothing to show for it, and we have more than held our own.

"We are looking at eighth or ninth, they are the positions we are aiming for. We have already had a fantastic season."

He dispelled any talk of having nothing to play for, and wants his side to win the battle of the mini-league around them, as they play the two teams immediately above them in their last two games, Dorchester, and Boreham Wood.

KEY MAN: Angels Frannie Collin

He said: "The fans turn up and pay good money to watch us, so we will be going out to win all three games. We have got something to play for."

Injuries and suspensions meant he was able to name just two substitutes on the bench on Easter Monday, and it will be much the same situation tomorrow.

NON-LEAGUE FOOTBALL FOCUS

WITH FRED ATKINS

Lack of FA Cup isn't a problem

KENT hasn't had an FA Cup finalist since the Royal Engineers in 1878, it's never had a top flight professional team unless you count Woolwich Arsenal before 1913, and in nearly a century since it's never had more than two clubs in the Football League, where Gillingham have been the sole representatives for the past 21 years.

There is one area however, where Kent at least punches its weight.

Of the 266 clubs who started this season in the national non-league system (above the Step Five level where county leagues operate), 13 are from Kent. If you cheat a bit and include Welling, Bromley and Cray that accounts for nearly six per cent of the total – not bad for a county which has three per cent of England's population.

What's unusual is how seldom any of these clubs have come to even challenging for a place in the Football League – and with it Gillingham's almost unbroken reign as Kent's top side.

In the 92 years since Gillingham were elected as founder members of Division Three South, they've been the highest-ranked Kent side in the football pyramid in every season bar one.

1989-90, when Gillingham came 14th in Division Four of the Football League and Maidstone United finished fifth, remains the only time Gillingham have been dethroned by another Kent side, although very occasionally another team has challenged.

Gillingham dropped back into the Southern League for a few years either side of World War Two and in 1949-50, to date their last season as a non-league team, they finished fifth, with Dartford sixth and Gravesend & Northfleet seventh.

Gillingham's dominance has otherwise been remarkably consistent. Since Maidstone's fleeting reign – which came at a ruinous financial cost – Dover, Ebbsfleet and Margate have all been in the Conference, without ever seriously threatening to get into the Football League.

Gillingham did once nearly drop out of it in 1993-94, when Dover were eighth in the Conference, but since then the gap has widened.

Although Sussex now has a second Football League side in Crawley, it's unlikely they'll challenge Brighton in the short or long term, while Norwich and Ipswich have no serious competition in Norfolk and Suffolk respectively.

Even in places like Northampton and Lincoln someone like Rushden or Boston occasionally comes along for a few seasons.

It would only take a bad year at Priestfield and they might be in the same division as Ebbsfleet, but it's felt Gillingham are untouchable for at least another 10 years.

Andy Hessenthaler also felt Ebbsfleet's financial situation would hold them back and rated Dartford as biggest short-term threat due to their fan base and facilities. He also felt Maidstone might return.
